Objectives

The recitation is integrated with the large lecture. You will study the theoretical and conceptual framework of the five core pillars of ethics, i.e., quantitative analytical skills, communication skills, information literacy competencies, and global awareness, as well as functional knowledge in the large lecture. The recitation will enhance your understanding through the Shadow-a-Company research project working on a real business case and data.

Specifically, the recitation emphasizes the following with respect to the five pillars of the Shadow-a-Company research project:

Ethics awareness: The research project is required to thoroughly address ethics awareness, such as corporate social responsibility, and the ethical implications of business plans. Ethics in information literacy competencies also needs to be considered, such as proper use of reliable and accurate information, and critically evaluating and avoiding the use of misinformation without any factual proof. This proliferates and is widely spread in digital information.

Quantitative Analytical Skills: The Shadow-a-Company research project requires quantitative analysis using an Excel spreadsheet. The quantitative exercises in the SAM are designed to help you analyze various concepts and models in business and can be applied to the data collected for the Shadow-a-Company research project. You will interpret the results, derive managerial implications, and present your recommendations.

Communication Skills: The recitation is designed to enhance students' communication skills in a business setting. Your assignments in the recitation will allow you to develop a foundation of Microsoft Excel and PowerPoint knowledge from which you can build. This course aims to help students become proficient communicators and contributors in a team setting. Thus, group work and class demonstrations/discussions are emphasized in the recitation, with the objective to improve students' ability to accomplish goals while respecting others and learning from multiple
