The Crown Prosecution set out boundaries as to what injuries would be considered under each offence in 1994. Whilst it is not strictly law it does have considerable bearing on how D will be charged. The main points are:

1. Minor injuries such as a black eye, reddening of the skin, minor cuts, grazes, minor swellings or abrasions are to be charged as Assault or Battery.
2. Whereas more serious harm such as broken teeth, loss of consciousness, temporary loss of functions, psychiatric injury, cuts short of requiring surgery and minor fractures will be charged as ABH.
3. Most other injuries above these thresholds will be charged as GBH.
