

CONSTRUCTION, VALIDATION, AND STANDARDIZATION OF THE SEXUAL S-ON APPLICATION

By: Delcea, C (Delcea, Cristian) [1]

Abstract

Objective: To create, standardize and scientifically validate the S-ONapp digital application for mobile phone users in order to diagnose sexual dysfunctions.

Methods: 200 men and 200 women from the USA, Canada, Asia and Europe with sexual dysfunction accessed the S-ONapp application through the Google Play platform, following advertisements on social networks.

Results: Data indicates high fidelity on Cronbach's Alpha for each scale of the application and high test retest reliability. Significant correlations were obtained after reporting/linking the S-ONapp digital application to another similar digital tool, such as Sexual-DSMapp Application, indicating a high structural validity.

Conclusions: The results obtained indicate that the S-ONapp application, through the two tools for assessing and testing sexual dysfunctions, has clinical robustness in diagnosing sexual dysfunctions.

Keywords: S-ONapp, mobile application, testing, evaluation, sexual dysfunction.

INTRODUCTION

S-ONapp is a new assessment and testing option in diagnosing sexual dysfunction via electronic modules, using a smartphone application¹. The app is the reconstruction of a clinical testing session, initially standardised and validated in a format in which the client actively interacts with the digital material using his or her electronic device, without the physical presence of a specialist^{2,3,4}.

The existing digital apps for the assessment and testing of sexual dysfunction available in Google Play and App Store mainly target sexual education, testing sexual compatibility, sex-therapy coaching, as well as providing information on sex⁵. This niche requires the development of standardised apps for the assessment and testing of sexual dysfunction, in order to lead both client and clinician to a correct specialised diagnosis and subsequently to treatment after the evaluation^{6,7}.

This study proposes the creation, standardisation and scientific validation of the Clinical Screening as well as the Sexual Stimulus Preference Questionnaire, both instruments being part of the same app system, S-ONapp.

CONCLUSION

The acute need for clinical assessment, screening and intervention services in sexual dysfunction, using a smartphone app¹⁰, meant to reduce the cost of travelling to specialised clinics and time spent in waiting rooms, determines the need for the digitisation of specialised services¹¹ in the field of sex therapy, protecting patients by reducing user risks to a minimum¹². Thus, the S-ONapp application, through its psychodiagnostic attributes, especially in a pandemic context¹³, has proven its usefulness and efficiency in optimising couples' sexual dynamics, as well as in preventing sexual disorders¹⁴.
