

THE CHANGING PROFESSION

AN INTERNATIONAL PERSPECTIVE

INTRODUCTION

Coincidentally with the invitation to deliver this prestigious address in honour of Molly Levy, I came across an article by Michael Wright in the London Daily Telegraph under the title, "Unaccustomed as we are, the lecture stages a come back" which caused me some immediate concern as to whether it would be wise to accept the invitation. The writer pointed out that there was a time when public lectures were an opportunity for grand British explorers to share their new-found knowledge with expectant Victorians, or for Oscar Wilde to wow America with his new-minted Aestheticism, but more recently, TV and radio had made the "live" talking head almost redundant:

"Even for university students, lectures are often a tedious anachronism, strictly for sad people: the endless attended by the friendless".

I was not encouraged by these observations, but more was to come! The writer was quick to point out that despite a number of attempts to abolish the university lecture it persists largely because if it is done away with the students don't do anything and there is still the demand for the shamanic figure in front of them.

"It seems to be a deep human need to be bored by someone who is actually present".

Hardly reassuring!

But, as you see, I did accept. Two reasons overcame my reservations; firstly, I knew that, despite Michael Wright's observations, I would be in the company of friends and, most importantly, the occasion would provide the opportunity to pay my tribute to Molly Levy – a lady for whom we all share the most profound respect for her warmth, humanity, loving spirit and dedication to our profession.

I first met Molly when I came to South Africa in connection with the selection of visually impaired students for my programme in London. Molly served on the South African National Council for the Blind Physiotherapy Selection Panel in which capacity she was respected for her integrity, understanding and the goodness reflected in her gracious counsel. I greatly appreciated the warmth of her personality. The essence of Molly Levy is encapsulated in a description of her that I received from another friend and colleague, as the "The Mother of South African Physiotherapy".

THE CHANGING PROFESSION – AN INTERNATIONAL PERSPECTIVE

In years to come there will be no doubt in the mind of anyone reviewing your Congress as to the primary interests of South African physiotherapists in 1997.

The titles and content of the lectures, workshops and other elements of the programme emphasise new approaches, techniques and the changes which are currently taking place in the profession as it is practiced in South Africa. It is a time of great change for us all and the changes which are taking place here are reflected throughout the world. At this time of so much change I would be surprised if there were not mixed emotions and some reaction to it; for just as change can bring a new vitality to practice it can also be threatening for those who prefer the status quo.

The following quotations are apposite:

"Change is not made without inconvenience, even from worse to better."

Dr Johnson's preface to the English Dictionary.

"A State without the means of some change is without the means of its conservation."

Edmund Burke (1729-1797) Reflections on the Revolution in France. Perhaps some would find an echo of their true feelings in the immortal words of the second verse of Henry Francis Lyte's hymn, "Abide With Me":

*"Change and decay in all around I see;
O Thou who changest not, abide with me."*

A recent article in the Journal of the Royal Society of Medicine under the title, 'Responding to Change – or Despondent and Estranged' (Coni – 1997), the writer draws attention to the sagging morale of consultant physicians in the UK as reported by the Royal College of Physicians. It pinpoints the reason as too much change happening too fast. Consultant physicians are not alone in this view.

Every profession has to face the inconvenience of change to preserve its relevance in and for the society it seeks to serve. Furthermore, we all need to consider the international dimensions of our contemporary professional practice in the context of the changes taking place in the "global village" in which we all operate. What is the "global village"? What are the forces that now impact on the national and international dimensions of our health practice? These are issues that demand our fullest consideration.

THE HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

The unstable nature of our contemporary practice can perhaps be best appreciated in the context of an historical perspective and an assessment of our future prospects.

Physiotherapy had one of its most important origins in physical education: the knowledge and functions of the human body and the effect of exercise on its systems in health and disease. A comprehensive study and knowledge of anatomy and physiology, particularly that of the musculo-skeletal system, being essential to our practice. The profession owes much to a long line of educators who recognised and saw the teaching of anatomy and the study of human movement as the fundamental bases of our clinical practice.

Here, I would like to pay personal tribute to my friend Iose Sellars who, as a staff member of UCT, gained the utmost respect of colleagues and students as an anatomist of the highest order who conveyed the love and relevance of her subject to all those who came under her influence both as undergraduates and post graduates.

I see no reason to shift this emphasis in physiotherapy education programmes. In fact, there is every reason to reinforce the central position of living anatomy and kinesiology in the education of the physiotherapists of the future. I also have no doubt that teachers of physiotherapy are best placed to emphasise anatomy and movement studies in a relevant and meaningful way within the practice of
