

Environmental Science Game: Controlling Populations

Frog Population Simulation Game

Through this game, you will learn about the importance of frog populations in controlling mosquito populations in ecosystems.

The goal is to maintain a healthy balance between frog and mosquito populations in your ecosystem.

Each player will receive 500 frog tokens to represent frogs and mosquito tokens to represent mosquitoes. Record your results on the recording sheet.

Each player or group of players will start with 50 frogs and 50 mosquitoes. Use your frog tokens to represent the frogs and mosquito tokens if using them.

How to Play:
Use the dice to determine the outcome for each turn.

1 die = Mosquito population decreases by half

4 dice = Mosquito population doubles

5 dice = Mosquito population triples

2 dice = Frog population doubles

3 dice = Frog population doubles

6 dice = 1 frog dies

End of Game Conditions

- The game continues until one of the following conditions is met:
  - The frog population reaches 500, representing a successful control of the mosquito population.
  - The mosquito population reaches 500, representing a malaria outbreak or other negative consequences of mosquito overpopulation.

Reflect and Learn

- After completing the game, take a moment to reflect on your experience and be prepared to discuss with your peers.
  - Consider the importance of maintaining a balance between frog and mosquito populations in real ecosystems.
  - Discuss the potential consequences of disrupting this balance and the role of frog populations in controlling mosquito populations to prevent disease outbreaks and maintain ecosystem health.

RESULTS RECORDING SHEET

Record your game play results in the chart below. Use the game until you first meet one of the "Game Ending Conditions" as described in the directions.
