Critique of Information Scott Lash, 2002-01-21 This penetrating book raises questions about how power operates in contemporary society It explains how the speed of information flows has eroded the separate space needed for critical reflection It argues that there is no longer an outside to the global flows of communication and that the critique of information must take place within the information itself The operative unit of the information society is the idea With the demise of depth reflection reflexivity through the idea now operates external to the subject in its circulation through networks of humans and intelligent machines It is these ideas that make the critique of information possible This book is a major testament to the prospects of culture politics and theory in the global information society

Trajectories in Near Eastern Apocalyptic John C. Reeves, 2006 Modern treatments of Jewish apocalyptic usually terminate their discussions of this literature with the triumph of Rome over nationalist rebels at the time of the Second Jewish Revolt 132 135 CE They hence fail to appreciate the impact of the subsequent rise of scriptural authority for the Abrahamic religions and the renewed vitality of the apocalyptic genre as a favored literary vehicle for the expression of social and cultural concerns by the major Near Eastern religious communities during the second half of the first millennium CE The present volume begins the process of righting this imbalance by providing an English language anthology of a series of influential Jewish apocalypses emanating from the Near East from roughly the early seventh to the mid twelfth centuries CE Each text is newly translated into English and provided with an annotated commentary that elucidates its historical literary and religious contexts Paperback edition is available from the Society of Biblical Literature www.sbl-site.org
