Advanced Technology Concepts For Command And Contr:

Advanced Technology Concepts for Command and Control Alexander Kott, 2004-02-01 The origin of this book lies in a program sponsored by the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency DARPA to explore innovative technologies with the potential to catalyze a revolutionary change in command and control C2 specifically joint aerospace operations the Joint Force Air Component Commander JFACC program The JFACC program was initiated in 1996 under an original charter of developing technologies for assisting in the rapid semi automated construction of a fully delineated cross functional air campaign plan After less than two years of using then current AI techniques in planning and scheduling the program decided to abandon this more traditional approach and in late 1999 adopted a new technical direction Led by Program Manager Colonel Dan McCorry USAF the program recreated itself under the following hypothesis Control Theory and its supporting technologies have developed sufficiently to be applicable to problems in military C2 It is upon the results of this latter phase of the JFACC program that this book is based A goal of this book is to present the potential military utility of control engineering in a way that the non specialist can understand and evaluate We chose to adopt a style that is neither a collection of technical papers nor an entirely non technical discussion resulting in a book that does not require a specialist s background and yet provides a significant measure of technical content We avoid jargon and formalism and focus instead on how the technology will work in practice its limitations and dependencies as well as its utility and value
