Thomas,Jerome Edward Kotecki,2002 This book focuses on the interconnectedness of health and being physically alive Neuronal Control of Cardiovascular and Respiratory Function during Physical Exercise Patrick Kimuyu,2018-02-02 Academic Paper from the year 2018 in the subject Medicine Anatomy Physiology Cytology grade 1 Egerton University language English abstract Exercise is an active biological process that involves energy consumption by the active muscles which are involved in physical exercise This implies that the activity of muscles primarily skeletal muscles changes considerably during physical exercise compared to the situation experienced during resting when muscles are not engaged in active activities During any physical exercise including sporting activities such as marathon and cycling skeletal muscles are fired by the chemical energy from the respiratory sites within the cell the mitochondria which generate energy in the form of adenosine triphosphate ATP Despite the role played by the active muscles during exercise it is worth noting that the activity of these muscles is controlled by the neuronal system From a physiological perspective the neuronal system controls the functioning of the two principal systems involved in energy metabolism Cellular respiration requires adequate supply of Oxygen and organic molecules such as glucose and fatty acids which are metabolized to generate energy for use by the muscles during exercise Therefore this paper will provide a comprehensive discussion on the neuronal control of cardiovascular and respiratory function during exercise Physical Activity and Angiotensin I-converting Enzyme Polymorphism Effect on Cardiovascular Disease Risk Factors in Young Adults Jeremy Lynn Knous,2010 Journal of Health, Physical Education, Recreation ,1963 Physical Activity in Health and Disease Karl Evang,Kristian Lange Andersen,1966 Training United States.
