economics Kerala's Gulf Connection Kappadath Parameswara Kannan, 2002 Migration and Development Kunniparampil Curien Zachariah, Sebastian Irudaya Rajan, 2009-01-01 Demography is destiny for most populations At this juncture of its demographic transition it is however migration that is destiny for the Kerala population According to the first Kerala Migration Study 1999 migration had provided the single most dynamic factor in the otherwise dismal economic scenario of Kerala in the last quarter of the twentieth century This Book documents Kerala s deepening socio economic nexus with the Gulf countries through emigration based on the second Kerala Migration Survey conducted in 2004 funded the South Asian Network of Economic Institutes SANE and the special grant from the Centre for Development Studies Kerala It provides information on the size trend geographical distribution socio economic composition of migrants and remittances sent home by migrants Analysis based on this new study indicates that migration is continuing to provide the most dynamic factor in the economic growth of Kerala State in the new century The new century is likely to see migration encompassing a wider section of the Kerala population and the migration impact spreading to newer sectors of the Kerala economy Migrants of the 21st century would be structurally different from those of the 20th century They would be better qualified and would be occupying higher positions in the job market abroad The economic and political climate in the State seems to be becoming more receptive to profitable investments in developmental projects on a much larger scale in the coming decades Emigration is likely to bring in besides the much needed capital entrepreneurship and business leadership for Kerala s development Migration is poised to determine more closely Kerala s destiny in the socio economic development in the coming decades
