

We know, and only need to be reminded, that the whole law is in Him. For, as He gave that which is the basis, the principle, of the intent and desire and purpose which should prompt our activity, so we in our own world - as we live, as we speak, as we pray - are to let it be in that tempo, in that way and manner which was prompted by Him, as He taught His disciples how to pray. Then, as we analyze this prayer in our experience, we see what the life, the death, the resurrection of Jesus, the Christ - who is the way, the truth, the light - must mean in this period in the experience of man.

Wilson Company, 1967 The New Skepticism Paul Kurtz, 1992 In this provocative book philosopher Paul Kurtz one of the world's leading skeptics explores the dimensions of the new skepticism which he labels skeptical inquiry An outgrowth of pragmatism skeptical inquiry differs from earlier forms of skepticism Kurtz argues because its motivation is inquiry rather than doubt Thus the new skepticism is constructive rather than negative Part 1 is a historical review starting with the classical skepticism of the Sophists Pyrrhonists Carneades and others The beginnings of modern skepticism are then traced back to the Renaissance and the Reformation and thinkers such as Descartes and Hume The historical survey concludes with a look at the pragmatism of Peirce Dewey Hook and Rorty and its postmodernist critics

Kurtz thus paves the way for consideration of skeptical inquiry a new more meaningful and justifiable skepticism In Part 2 Inquiry and Objectivity Kurtz critiques the nihilistic and mitigated forms of classical skepticism and the egocentric predicament He argues that classical skepticism is no longer viable given the development of reliable knowledge in many fields of human inquiry He also maintains that there are objective criteria for testing knowledge claims and these are often as effective in ordinary life as they are in the sciences He asks Should we not suspend judgment about beliefs for which there is neither sufficient evidence nor adequate reasons In Part 3 The Paranormal Religion and Fantasy Kurtz discusses the psychology of belief He finds that both paranormal and theistic beliefs are based on powerful human dispositions including the proclivity for fantasy and illusion In Part 4 The Judgments of Practice Kurtz demonstrates that skeptical inquiry can be applied to ethics and politics with positive results He argues that scientific inquiry has already provided a reliable body of tested hypotheses and a cosmic outlook Moreover Kurtz points out critical thinking can provide practical guidance to human action This book is sure to provoke controversy among skeptics and nonskeptics alike
