The Christ-Centered Heart Rick Mathis, 1999. This book begins and ends with the belief that Christ lives within the human heart and that the main purpose of life is to center on his presence. Though this sounds simple, it can be an arduous process. In The Christ-Centered Heart, author Rick Mathis explores what it means on a personal level to recognize the power of Christ. Drawing heavily on the Bible, the Desert Fathers, and Brother Lawrence of the Resurrection, as well as on such contemporary writers as Larry Dossey, Richard Carlson, Henri Nouwen, and Thomas Merton, the author combines traditional and contemporary wisdom to show how human love often fails in common experience but how God's love will never fail. Personal anecdotes illustrate how sin prevents people from exhibiting the fruits of the Spirit but also how grace can change hearts and lives. At the center of the book is the movement from inside to out, and as the author explores human reactions to life's unforeseen changes, he explains what it means to interact with the world in a more loving, Christ-centered way and to reap the rewards of such an interaction.

The Christ-Centered Life Daniel Slott, 2017-07-14. The Great Commission in Matthew 28:18-20 is a command for all God's people to make disciples, to teach others how to turn all things in life to be centered in Christ by allowing the gospel to shape how we think, feel, and act. That is why at the heart of the Great Commission is the reality of the Greatest Commandment: to love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength (Mark 12:30). And it is the gospel of Jesus Christ that harmoniously ties these truths together. In The Christ-Centered Life, Daniel Slott, an American missionary and church planter to the East Asian people, provides a simple, reproducible method everyone can use to learn and train another how the gospel shapes foundational Christian practices, values, and beliefs to be centered in Christ. Although originally written for a church in East Asia, it has been modified to bring people from all cultures and backgrounds together to think deeply and dialogue transparently about living a life that cherishes Christ and reflects His infinite, glorious worth in the details of everyday life.
