Cheyenne O'Brien Kern,2004-08-01 In order to comprehend the vastness and depth of the universe in which we are an expression it is essential to understand the nature of awareness itself Awareness turns out to be a singularity of inseparable distinctions any aspect of the universe as content to any perceiving being as a context of awareness while distinct is not separable from its context and while inseparable is not indistinctly of one nature with its context Now both contemporary physics and mystical theology reveal essential singularities and both thrive and develop by various forms of paradox although expressed in different forms It is the author s contention that both of these singularities are expressions of the root singularity of awareness itself meaning that all subjective spiritual states and objective space time modalities are interwoven in a nonlinear and nonlocal way revealing a vast and awesome multidimensional universe that is far different from bringing science and religion together as two individually developed disciplines sharing some common ground What is required and here presented is an intrinsic dynamic of awareness revealing far ranging levels of singularity through methodology called here a triune monadology based on a logic of paradox
