

POLITICAL VIOLENCE IN MEXICO

Mexico is one of the most dangerous places in the world to be a local politician

Mexico has seen a rapid and dramatic surge in political violence in the last four election cycles.

Local politicians and political candidates are particularly vulnerable to this type of violence. And yet, the current protection mechanisms neglect local protection and prioritize the federal and state levels.

Political violence in Mexico is challenging common understandings of criminal groups and power dynamics that have been contributing to broader violent trends in Mexico

In 2018, a single act of violence against a political campaign or government authority correlated to a 1% drop in turnout in municipal elections and a 2% drop in federal elections

Experts argue that the 2024 elections will have the most politically motivated assassinations and aggressions.

Although President López Obrador has publicly stated that he will ensure there is no impunity in any case of political violence, reality proves otherwise.

Between January and May 2023, (months before the pre-campaign period), over 100 violent events were reported, marking a 32% increase compared to 2022 levels.

From September 2023 (the beginning of the electoral process) to November 2023: 81 murders, 6 threats, 18 armed attacks, 13 attacks, 5 disappearances, and 8 kidnappings were reported.

Only in the first week of January 2024, 5 politically motivated murders were registered.

Unless Mexico takes its commitment to confront political violence seriously and puts in place mechanisms to prevent, investigate, and sanction attacks on candidates and other politically active persons, political violence will continue to be used as a tool to bend and impact elections, dealing yet one more blow to Mexican democracy.
