

Cross-Border Terrorism

Cross-border terrorism remains a significant threat to global stability, particularly in regions with porous borders and geopolitical tensions. It involves terrorist groups operating from one country to launch attacks in another, often with state or non-state support. India has faced repeated instances of cross-border terrorism, particularly from Pakistan-based groups like Lashkar-e-Taiba and Jaish-e-Mohammed. These organizations exploit border vulnerabilities to infiltrate and carry out attacks. Nations affected by cross-border terrorism emphasize counter-terrorism operations, intelligence-sharing, and diplomatic pressure to curb such threats. As global security concerns rise, international cooperation remains crucial in combating terrorism and ensuring regional stability.
