Study: Latinos face barriers finding child care

By Aurora Simoes and Lucia Simoes-Pena

When Lucia Simoes, an immigrant from Cuba, first came to the United States, one of her concerns was finding the appropriate day care to send her children to. "I was a single mom, and I had to work," she says. "I was living in the Belmont-Cragin area, and the day care centers were not there. I had to drive across the city to find a day care center."

Lucy, Simoes was referred to a center that is affordable and has a long history of serving the Latino community. "I was very nervous, but the staff was very helpful and they were very friendly," she says. "I was able to find a day care center that was close to my home and that was affordable."

Simoes says that finding child care was a challenge for her. "I had to drive across the city to find a day care center that was close to my home and that was affordable." She says that the staff at the center was very helpful and that she was able to find a day care center that was close to her home and that was affordable.
