ABSTRACT

This article presents a Theories, Contexts, and Methods (TCM)-Antecedents, Decisions, and Outcomes (ADO) framework-based systematic review based on the TCM-ADO framework to synthesize consumer perspectives of plant-based meat alternatives (PBMA). This article offers an overview of the TCM presented in the reviewed articles. ADO are examined to delineate the factors influencing consumer choices and their implications. By integrating these perspectives, the review provides a holistic view, setting a foundation for targeted strategies in promoting PBMA adoption. This review identifies 26 antecedents from 53 articles, organized into four main categories: individual-related antecedents, socio-demographic factors, sociocultural factors, and product-related antecedents. Understanding consumers' perspectives on PBMA is crucial to developing strategies that encourage sustainable dietary changes. This review highlights the complexity of consumer decision-making regarding PBMA and underscores the need for multi-pronged strategies to enhance their acceptance and purchase intention. Furthermore, the TCM and ADO frameworks are used to identify literature gaps and suggest future research directions. This approach supports stakeholders in developing targeted interventions that facilitate the transition to more sustainable food systems.

JEL Classification: D12, M31, O13, Q01, Q561 | Introduction

The food sector is responsible for over 25% of total greenhouse gas emissions, significantly exacerbating the problem of global warming. More than 50% of these emissions originate from animal production, with a substantial portion attributed to meat production. This contributes significantly not only to environmental pollution but also to the reduction of biodiversity (Ritchie and Roser 2020). Excessive meat consumption has also been linked to higher mortality rates from non-communicable diseases, imposing significant economic consequences. It was estimated that in 2020, the treatment of health issues related to excessive consumption of red and processed meat cost the global economy £219 billion (Springmann et al. 2018; Du et al. 2020; Luan et al. 2020).

As the global population continues to grow and incomes rise, the demand for meat is projected to increase, intensifying these challenges (OECD-FAO and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development-Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations 2023). Plant-based meat alternatives (PBMA) have emerged as a promising solution to address the environmental and health impacts associated with traditional meat consumption. By mimicking the sensory and nutritional qualities of meat, PBMA offers a sustainable and healthier alternative that can potentially reduce the footprint of the food
