Electronic Century Alfred Chandler argues that only with consistent attention to research and development and an emphasis on long term corporate strategies could firms remain successful over time He details these processes for nearly every major chemical and pharmaceutical firm demonstrating why some companies forged ahead while others failed By the end of World War II the chemical and pharmaceutical industries were transformed by the commercializing of new learning the petrochemical and the antibiotic revolutions But by the 1970s chemical science was no longer providing the new learning necessary to commercialize more products although new directions flourished in the pharmaceutical industries In the 1980s major drug companies including Eli Lilly Merck and Schering Plough commercialized the first biotechnology products and as the twenty first century began the infrastructure of this biotechnology revolution was comparable to that of the second industrial revolution just before World War I and the information revolution of the 1960s Shaping the Industrial Century is a
