

United States Public Health Service bicentennial 1798–1998: A focus on oncology pharmacy practice at the National Institutes of Health

Letitia J Wright, PharmD

The United States Public Health Service (USPHS), formerly known as the Marine Hospital Service (MHS), was established and signed into law by President John Adams in 1798. The primary duty of the MHS was to render health care to the merchant marine sailors.^{1,2} In 1873, hospital stewards of the MHS were required to provide pharmaceutical services such as maintaining an inventory of medications, medical supplies, and hospital instruments and labeling medicinal agents with the name of the patient and directions for use.³ The 1879 MHS regulations stipulated that a pharmacist or "medical purveyor" be included in the MHS. It is generally accepted that the first MHS medical purveyor was Oscar Oldberg. The requirement for graduation from a pharmacy program was added to the MHS regulations in 1897.¹ The Commissioned Corps, composed of physicians only, was instituted by an act of Congress in 1888. The professions of medicine and pharmacy were the only professions recognized by the MHS in the 19th century.¹

MHS pharmacists participated in standardization activities that influenced the formation of the United States Pharmacopoeia. In 1894, under the authority of the Surgeon General, the first pharmacist was stationed at MHS headquarters. The USPHS evolved from the MHS in 1912 because of its expanding developmental role in public health science.^{1,2} In 1918, a reserve corps composed of pharmacists, dentists, and engineers was commissioned to serve with the Commissioned Corps of physicians of the USPHS.^{3,4}

The Parker Act of 1930 allowed pharmacists to become a part of the regular corps and to be promoted to a grade equivalent to that of an Army Captain.^{1,2} As commissioned officers, pharmacists were eligible to provide services during war times, starting with World War II. Pharmacists and physicians served as support for the construction of the China to Burma railroad. They stored quinine and opium, promoted the use of sanitary procedures to prevent epidemics, and advocated the use of dichlorodiphenyltrichloroethane (DDT) to control the insect population.⁵ In addition, their duties included providing quarantine services that entailed the inspection of ships and planes to prevent the importation of foreign communicable diseases.¹ Starting in 1944, pharmacists were allowed to be promoted to pharmacy director, a rank that is equivalent to an Army Colonel, because of their continuing influence on medical practice.^{1,2}

A pharmacy service was organized in 1945 to oversee the clinics and hospitals of the USPHS. Raymond D. Kinsey was the first USPHS pharmacy officer to reach the rank of pharmacist director. Pharmacists were valued not only for their apothecary practices but also for their administrative and management skills. In 1971, Edgar Duncan, was the first pharmacist to be promoted to the rank of Assistant Surgeon General (a rank corresponding to Army Brigadier General or Navy Rear Admiral). In 1979, Congress decreed that the Chief Pharmacy Officer was entitled to the rank of Assistant Surgeon General.⁵

In the last 30 years, USPHS commissioned officer and civil service pharmacists at the National Institutes of Health (NIH) Clinical Center (CC), the 350-bed federal research hospital that supports the intramural research program of the NIH, have been instrumental in expanding the role of the pharmacist from the management and dispensing of medications to the provision of patient-focused pharmaceutical care services (see Sidebar) and
