

A woman in silhouette is sitting on a beach at sunset. She is facing away from the camera, looking out at the ocean. The sun is a large, bright orb on the horizon, creating a strong backlighting effect. In front of her, an open book lies on the sand, surrounded by several red rose petals. The overall mood is contemplative and melancholic.

Woman's Record Sarah Josepha Buell Hale, 1853. Taking Root in the Heart Jill Peláez Baumgaertner, 2023-03-21. A new collection from the best and most prolific poets published in the Christian Century over the past twenty-five years. The 34 poets whose work appears defy the narcissistic tendencies of so much contemporary poetry. They do not necessarily express a particular orthodoxy, but they do connect with something larger than the self. Theirs is poetry that attempts to revitalize language, especially theological language. It is poetry that attempts to upset the usual modes of expression and offers up new angles of vision, especially in regard to biblical stories. For most of the poets, though not all, by any means, Jesus is the Word made flesh, and the Incarnation is the paradigm, as poets attempt to en flesh the abstract, make the spirit tangible, and put into words the unsayable. Poets have a way of taking on what utterly cannot be done. And those are the poems that should appear in a journal of religious news and reflection. The poetic approaches and styles of the work of these poets are immensely varied, from the masterful narratives of Sydney Lea to the finely wrought lyrics of Charles Hughes to the always edgy and surprising poems of Bill Stadick to the most imagistic and prolific work of Luci Shaw to the provocative poems of Christian Wiman. Then there are the superb sonnets of Gracia Grindal and Angela Alaimo O'Donnell and the compelling explorations of the deep spirituality of the everyday that comprise Tania Runyan's vision. The poems in the journal often explore biblical themes, doctrinal issues, or theological conundrums. But many of the poems that appear in the Christian Century present human experience or encounters with the natural world that do not seem on the surface religious but reveal a deep humanity at the core What defines all of these poems is a commitment to communicating with readers seeking truth beauty and authenticity Watch the Book Trailer HERE Anthea William Stigand,1907 Woman's Record; or, sketches of all distinguished women from the Creation to A.D. 1854 ...
