

NATURE WRITING FROM A RANCHER'S POINT OF VIEW

A large, spreading tree stands in the center of a vast, green field. The sky above is a deep blue, filled with soft, white clouds. The overall scene is peaceful and rural.

Between Grass And Sky Where I Live And Work:

Between Grass and Sky Linda M. Hasselstrom, 2002 Acclaimed nature writer Linda M Hasselstrom sees herself as a rancher who writes a self definition that shapes the tone and content of her writing Now owner of the cattle ranch where she grew up in western South Dakota she lives in daily intimate contact with the natural world As she says Nature is to me both home and office Nature is my boss manager of the branch office or ranch office where I toil to convert native grass into meat If I want to keep my job as well as my home I pay attention not only to Nature s orders but to her moods and whims The essays in this book reflect Hasselstrom s close attention to her homeplace and the depth of her sympathy with the world around her She writes knowingly of the rancher s toil and of the intelligence and dignity of the animals she tends especially the much maligned cow as well as of the wild creatures the owls and antelope and coyotes and others that share the prairie grassland she calls home Hasselstrom s voice rings with the ardent common sense of one who knows and loves the land who appreciates the concerns of environmental activists but also knows the role that responsible ranchers can play in nurturing a healthy rural ecosystem This book is by no means an apologia for ranching but rather a lively picture of a specific part of the world a world Hasselstrom writes about with candor love and the clear sight of one who knows it well The essays are rich in closely observed details of the natural world in humor and pathos and wry commentary on the scope of human folly and the even vaster potential of humans for community and empathy These are essays to read with wonder and delight to relish and ponder
