Behavior And Arteriosclerosis:

Behavior and Arteriosclerosis J. Alan Herd, Stephen M. Weiss, 2012-12-06 During the past decade cardiovascular medicine has made significant strides in the diagnosis and treatment of coronary heart disease and related disorders as well as developing a better understanding of potential preventive risk reducing measures Highly sophisticated diagnostic instrumentation surgical procedures and emergency medical care have undoubtedly contributed greatly to the trend of declining mortality from cardiovascular events In the course of the extensive research efforts associated with this area it has become increasingly apparent that the identified coronary risk factors share the common element of lifestyle as a major determiner of health behaviors associated with these factors Further it is suspected that behavioral and environmental factors may play a significant contributory role toward the etiology and progression of arteriosclerosis through their effects on the central and peripheral nervous systems and associated neurohormonal response Considerable research effort has been devoted to identifying the risks associated with smoking elevated blood pressure and serum cholesterol Research development and modification is being vigorously pursued Behavioral research exploring the role of psychological stress factors social support networks stressful life events and the Type A/B behavior patterns has uncovered potentially meaningful associations between behavioral factors and arteriosclerosis as discussed in the succeeding chapters of this book

Behavioral Aspects of Cardiovascular Disease Alvin P. Shapiro, Andrew S. Baum, Andrew S. Baum, 2014-05-12 Smoking diet stress coping and exercise among other behaviors and psychological states are now clearly implicated in the development of cardiovascular diseases Prevention based largely on altering behaviors that contribute to this chronic disease is now as important a goal as is treatment of those already afflicted This volume based on a recent meeting of the Academy of Behavioral Medicine Research addresses several important areas of research in the general area of cardiovascular disease The topics covered reflect on important aspects of this phenomenon such as the long term development of coronary artery disease central nervous system CNS regulation of blood pressure heart rate and sympathetic tone playing a pivotal role in sympathetic activity and hypertension learned blood pressure modulation and baroreceptor activation as a means of reducing the aversiveness of stress or noxious stimulation and the notion that symptoms of heart disease or infarction may occur in the absence of organic heart disease Having been impressed by the recent advances in the field the editors of this book capture the wealth of newly acquired knowledge about behavioral factors in cardiovascular disease and how the body's nervous endocrine and cardiovascular systems work together

An opening address should ask the right questions which we expect to answer during the coming years A good opening address should formulate hypotheses for falsification during the conference or in the near future After Dr Groen's excellent lecture yesterday I feel better about my task because I feel I am not alone in asking the ten questions in my abstract It is an honor for me to give this short paper largely based on my experiences during 15 years as medical director of a rehabilitation center in Bavaria as a teacher at two medical schools in Munich and Innsbruck and as an old-fashioned holistic cardiologist However it also is a difficult task for me because the subject of this conference concerning biobehavioral factors in coronary heart disease is controversial not only in the medical society but in my own mind as well When I organized one of the first conferences on stress and coronary heart disease in West Germany in 1976 followed by conferences in 1979 and 1980 the semantic problems between physicians and psychologists were very significant However communication has improved in this area during the last decade The most encouraging event in this field was a symposium in May 1984 in Rotenburg Fulda on the topic Return to Work after Bypass Surgery organized by a cardiac surgeon Dr Walter
