

Behavioral Teratology: Overview

by Carole A. Kimmel*

The field of teratology has expanded in recent years to include the effects of prenatal insult on the function of postnatal animals. This broadening of teratology reflects an awareness of the need to look for more subtle manifestations of developmental toxicity than gross morphologic changes. One aspect of postnatal function which is receiving a great deal of attention is called behavioral teratology and has to do with alterations in behavior and how they may be produced during development. There is some indication that behavioral changes can be produced at dosage levels below those producing overt toxicity. Most of the information in this area comes from experiments with psychoactive agents (1), nutritional alterations (2,3) or ionizing radiations (4). More recently, environmental agents, including pesticides (5,6) and heavy metals such as mercury (7) and lead (8), have been tested for behavioral effects.

The use of behavioral tests as an integral part of the screening of new drugs and other agents is being discussed in this country, especially in light of recent regulations in Great Britain and Japan requiring such testing. However, before making decisions about requiring behavioral testing on a routine basis, a great deal of work must be done to develop adequate testing systems and the resources to carry out such testing. Since few laboratories have the funds or manpower available to develop such a broad approach for the purposes of screening new compounds, it is imperative that a concerted effort be made on the part of industry, academia and government to develop relevant testing procedures and that these procedures be made flexible so that changes can be made depending on the compound being tested.

The presentations in this session address the question of what we know about the assessment of behavioral anomalies in animals treated in prenatal or early postnatal life. The use of behavioral testing as an adjunct to teratologic evaluations reflects our concern over the developing nervous system and its special susceptibility to toxic agents. This session considers the usefulness of behavioral testing in toxicology studies, animal models, and critical periods of brain susceptibility, and presently available test methods which may be adapted for use in behavioral teratology testing. The implications of test results for man will very likely be as difficult to resolve as for other aspects of toxicology evaluations but must be seriously considered in developing new test systems.

Behavioral Teratology:

Handbook of Behavioral Teratology E.P. Riley, C.V. Vorhees, 2012-12-06 This book was developed in response to a need in behavioral teratology for a comprehensive set of reviews of the field's many topics brought together in a single source. This volume represents the first effort to synthesize and integrate research in the field since 1969 when Justin Joffe wrote Prenatal Determinants of Behaviour. Joffe's book became a standard reference for many years, particularly for the experimental design of animal investigations. It has become increasingly evident, however, that some aspects of design once considered inviolate have changed and become part of a more flexible approach. In current research, the emphasis is on a set of prioritized but focused experimental questions rather than on designs which factor all possible variables into every experiment. Also, new design considerations have arisen over the last 15 years not appreciated when Joffe wrote. Moreover, the sheer volume of new experimental evidence generated since 1969 has increased the content of the field several fold. These considerations made a new review and critical appraisal of the field compelling. The book is divided into four major sections. Part I contains four chapters. These chapters provide discussions of the general principles of behavioral teratogenesis and information on the historical governmental and methodological contexts in which the field operates. The purpose of these chapters is to provide the framework within which the review chapters in the remainder of the book may best be understood.

Behavioral Teratology, 1985-12-23 This bibliography contains references to material in the field of behavioral teratology, a hybrid between psychology with its emphasis on behavior and teratology which emphasizes factors interfering with normal development. Abel includes entries published prior to 1985 that deal with the effects of prenatal exposure to drugs environmental pollutants x rays and other detrimental influences on behavior after birth The entries are arranged first by type of agent and then alphabetically by author Each item is numbered consecutively and is referred to by number in the Subject Index An introduction provides background material on the field

Risk Assessment for Neurobehavioral Toxicity Bernard Weiss, Jürg Elsner, 1997-07 After three decades of research neurobehavioral toxicity is now acknowledged as a significant outcome of chemical exposure Its health and economic costs may exceed those by cancer by substantial amounts This new perspective has been accompanied by efforts designed to explore the responsible mechanisms to design applicable risk assessment procedures and to determine the consequent policy implications This publication includes 25 papers from international experts and includes human neurobehavioral toxicity animal behavioral methods selected model compounds and risk assessment

Handbook of Developmental Neurotoxicology William Slikker Jr., Merle G. Paule, Cheng Wang, 2018-01-04 Handbook of Developmental Neurotoxicology Second Edition provides a comprehensive view of the fundamental aspects of neurodevelopment the pathways and agents that affect them relevant clinical syndromes and risk assessment procedures for developmental neurotoxicants The editors and chapter authors are internationally recognized experts whose collaboration heralds a remarkable advance in the field bridging developmental neuroscience with the principles of neurotoxicology The book features eight new chapters with newly recruited authors making it an essential text for students and professionals in toxicology neurotoxicology developmental biology pharmacology and neuroscience Presents a comprehensive up to date resource on developmental neurotoxicology with updated chapters from the first edition Contains new chapters that focus on subjects recent to the field Includes well illustrated material with diagrams charts and tables Contains compelling case studies and chapters written by world experts

Neurobehavioral Toxicity Bernard Weiss, 1994-06-30 In establishing how certain chemicals can cause behavioural disorders the process of neurotoxicity risk assessment poses significant challenges to every discipline within neuroscience In this volume leaders from industrial academic and government settings share insights on behavioural measurement in neurotoxicity risk assessment and address the critical scientific issues arising from the expanding role of neurobehavioral toxicology in public policy development The authors set out to provide a comprehensive and authoritative review of current methods in the analysis and interpretation of neurobehavioural toxicology Coverage begins with a discussion of criteria for determining neurotoxic potential The next section examines neurobehavioural evaluations in developmental neurotoxicity Subsequent sections focus on activity and observational data and applications of schedule controlled operant behaviour in toxicity testing The contributors address controversies surrounding the suitability and interpretation of procedures designed for neurotoxicological assessments Some case studies are also included

Aging and Vulnerability to Environmental Chemicals Bernard Weiss, 2013 The world's aging populations with age related disorders affecting every organ system are generating medical care costs rising at an unsustainable rate Although such disorders are expected we are now beginning to ask whether exposures to toxic environmental chemicals hasten or account for their onset This book provides a detailed review of current knowledge about the possible associations between a variety of chemical contaminants and adverse effects later in life It will serve as a guide to policy decisions about protecting us from chemical exposures that distort the aging process It provides a guide to current understanding of how our contaminated environment may be influencing the aging process and contains examples of approaches that will help us undertake further research on this topic It will help alert policy makers to the implications of chemical pollution for aging populations and will help formulate initiatives for environmental protection The book provides a comprehensive view of how environmental exposures may alter the health of our aging population For readers engaged in environmental research or aging research it will highlight a number of questions that need more attention For other readers they will learn something about the kind of exposures they should avoid or that they should prompt policy makers to reduce or eliminate
