A Common Enemy:

A Common Enemy (Classic Reprint) J. D. Beresford, 2015-07-16 Excerpt from A Common Enemy The Campion family were all at home that evening waiting for the Alert signal The two boys home from the holidays were playing chess with an effect of deep absorption partly due to the desire to avoid their father's attention He was a very much better player than either of them and although when he came and overlooked their game he maintained a scrupulous silence they became uncomfortable and self-conscious when he watched them afraid that they might be missing all sorts of chances that he alone could see and was longing to point out to them He had a way of audibly catching his breath when he saw them commit What from his point of view was a ghastly blunder of some kind Arthur who was nearly eighteen was more sensitive to this silent criticism than his younger brother Nick Arthur was a hard working and quite an able boy but he liked to do things in his own way He was naturally conservative in his tastes and methods and had a great respect for tradition Nick was of a very different habit too versatile according to his school reports quick to take up what seemed to him interesting suggestions no matter from what source they came He was already a better chess player than his brother but lost many games to him through a search for the brilliant combination in the course of which he was liable to lose a piece without sufficient compensation in position and be worn down by Arthur's steady safety play About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
