number of minority children are experiencing difficulties at school and many leave school with no formal qualifications There are fears among many educators and policy makers that an entire generation of alienated youth with no future prospects is being produced by western educational systems This book analyses policy issues regarding the education of minority students in western industrialised societies and presents a number of case studies of programs that have been successful in reversing the pattern of minority students academic failure A central theme throughout the volume is that the causes of minority students academic difficulties are rooted in the power relations between the dominant and subordinate groups in society Schools have typically reflected and reinforced these power relations through strategies such as punishment of children for speaking their mother tongue at school with the result that minority students have not developed confidence in their own cultural identity or academic abilities Reversal of minority students school failure requires that educators set out to enable both minority students and communities to empower themselves The presentation of case studies in which this empowerment has been successfully achieved is complemented by the perspectives of individuals and minority communities who have been involved in the struggle for educational and linguistic rights of minority children
