Chinese Characteristics:

Chinese Characteristics Arthur H Smith, 2018-04 Chinese Characteristics 1894 was the most widely read American work on China until Pearl Buck's The Good Earth 1931. It was the first to take up the task of analyzing Chinese society in the light of scientific social and racial theory. Written as a series of pungent and sometimes comic essays for a Shanghai newspaper in the late 1880s, Chinese Characteristics was among the five most read books on China among foreigners living in China as late as World War I and it was read by Americans at home as a wise and authentic handbook. The book was quickly translated into Japanese and just as quickly into Chinese. It was accepted by the Chinese and has maintained its authoritative status for over a century as the quintessential portrait of the Chinese race drawn by a Westerner. Lu Xun, the most prominent Chinese cultural critic of the early twentieth century, urged his students to study and ponder Smith's message, which was very widely debated in Chinese student circles. Within the 1990s, two different new translations of Smith's book were published in China and both editions have enjoyed wide distribution and readership. In the West, particularly since World War II, Chinese Characteristics has been widely quoted though seldom read as a purported example of Sino myopia and Orientalism. Despite such Western pseudo-intellectual bias, Smith's arguments retain the power to provoke critical introspection among Chinese and for the honest among Westerners as well.

Chinese Characteristics Arthur H. Smith, 1894 Chinese Characteristics Arthur Henderson Smith, 1899 Chinese Characteristics Arthur H. Smith, 2014-09-20 Book Review Chinese Characteristics 1894 was the most widely read American work on China until Pearl Buck's The Good Earth 1931. It was the first to take up the task of analyzing Chinese society in the light of scientific social and racial theory. Lydia Liu, Professor of Columbia University, Book Introduction: Chinese Characteristics was written by a highly observant American missionary, Smith. He has lived over fifty years in China. This book was published firstly in 1890 in China, presents the social life and personal character traits of the typical Chinese. In this illustration edition, nearly 100 old photos are added, aiming to let the reader understand China more directly and truthfully. Lu Xun, the most prominent Chinese cultural critic of the early twentieth century, urged his students to study and ponder Smith's idea, which was widely debated in Chinese student circles. Chinese Characteristics Arthur H. Smith, 1892 Chinese Characteristics Arthur Henderson Smith, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1894 edition. Excerpt: CHAPTER XVIII CONTENT AND CHEERFULNESS WE have already seen that the capacity of the Chinese to bear the ills they have is a wonderful and to us in most cases an incomprehensible talent which has well been called a psychological paradox. Notwithstanding their apparently hopeless condition they do not appear to lose hope or rather they seem to struggle on without it and often against it. We do not perceive among them that restlessness which characterises the people of most other nations especially towards the close of the nineteenth century. They do not cherish plans which seem to them to lead ultimately to a good time coming and they do not appear to suppose that there is any such time to be expected But the terms patience and perseverance by no means cover the whole field of the Chinese virtues in this direction We must also take account of their quietness of mind in conditions often very unfavourable to it and of that chronic state of good spirits which we designate by the term cheerfulness Our main object is to call attention to the existence of such virtues yet we may perhaps be able incidentally to suggest certain considerations which in part help to account for them By the term contentedness we do not mean to imply that any individual in China is satisfied with what he possesses in such a way and to such a degree that he does not wish to better his condition The contentedness of the Chinese as we have seen in speaking of their conservatism is most conspicuously seen when we consider the system under which they live That system they do not wish to change That this is the temper of the great mass of the Chinese we have no doubt whatever It is a mode of viewing the phenomena of life which we designate Chinese Characteristics \(Classic Reprint\) Arthur Henderson Smith, 2016-06-27. Excerpt from Chinese Characteristics. Within the past thirty years, the Chinese has made himself a factor in the Affairs of many lands. He is seen to be irrepressible, is felt to be incomprehensible. He cannot indeed be rightly understood in any country but China, yet the impression still prevails that he is a bundle of contradictions who cannot be understood at all. But after all, there is no apparent reason now that several hundred years of our acquaintance with China have elapsed, why what is actually known of its people should not be coordinated as well as any other combination of complex phenomena.
