The UNCRD (United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child) Article 12 states children have the human right to have opinions and for these opinions to be heard and taken seriously, meaning all children have a right to have their voices heard and taken into account.

The child's voice refers to how they express themselves. Not only does it consider their direct spoken communication, but it also considers the many different ways children can communicate with us through their non-verbal actions, such as facial expressions, gestures, eye contact, signing, physical distance/closeness and their physiological responses, e.g. paleness or quickened breath.

The child's voice is extremely important and it is our role to listen and tune in to every child. From this, we can understand issues that affect particular children and it enables us to build secure relationships. It can help us support the child to reach their full potential by understanding what they are telling us and adapting our environments and teaching strategies to suit their individual needs.

Why is it Important to Consider the Child's Voice?

Every child has the right to be heard. Capturing the voice of the child is essential. Not only does it safeguard the child, but it ensures each child feels valued and heard. This helps support a child's confidence, happiness and their overall development.
