manufacturing industries during the period 1880 to 1997 using data from the Census of Manufactures and the Bureau of Labor Statistics Several important new results emerge from this exercise First we find that average spatial concentration was much lower in the late 20th than the late 19th century and that this was the outcome of a continuing reduction over time Second the persistent tendency to greater spatial dispersion was characteristic of most manufacturing industries Third even so economically and statistically significant spatial concentration was pervasive throughout this period      Concentration
