

Concept: Evidence

Definition

- The acquisition and application of scientific research as it relates to health care delivery.

Scope/Types:

- Scope: The scope ranges from the discovery and generation of evidence to the delivery of nursing care. Research provides evidence of process evaluation in the delivery of health care and support for the effectiveness of interventions. It is used to support or discard interventions and expectations about health and health care delivery. Research that generates evidence includes data collection, evaluation, comparison with other research, and identification of implications for practice. Translational research seeks to facilitate the application of current evidence into clinical practice. Evidence-based practice is an integration of the evidence base, care participant preferences and values, and clinical expertise.
- Types: Research is disseminated through literature, both digital and print, and other means of professional communication, such as conferences.
 - Primary literature: Reports of original research
 - Quantitative research starts with a research question or hypothesis about health and illness, relationships of variables, cause and effect, or effectiveness of interventions. Quantitative data are measurable and can be analyzed using numeric and statistical methods.
 - Qualitative research seeks to understand what the meaning of an experience is to individuals, such as the experience of diabetes or loss. Qualitative data are usually what participants describe, in their own words, to explore a health care experience in depth. These findings are evaluated for its meaning. The data are usually words and the process explores the topic deeply. Qualitative research helps nurses to understand the issues and meaning of an experience and can help identify needs and possible interventions, which may then be developed and tested by further research.
 - Mixed methods research uses a combination of qualitative and quantitative design strategies to explore a health care phenomenon.
 - Secondary literature
 - Summaries are brief analyses of individual studies that seek to meet the demand for brief, succinct information in the midst of an ever-increasing amount of available information.
 - Systematic reviews collect, synthesize, and integrate the studies on a topic. These reviews are very helpful in evaluating the evidence supporting or refuting a research question.
 - Meta-analyses are systematic reviews that use statistical methods to summarize the research on a topic. Well-performed systematic reviews and meta-analyses are the strongest forms of evidence.

Concept Of Evidence:

Ideas, Evidence, and Method Graciela De Pierris,2015-04-30 Graciela De Pierris presents a novel interpretation of the relationship between skepticism and naturalism in Hume's epistemology and a new appraisal of Hume's place within early modern thought Whereas a dominant trend in recent Hume scholarship maintains that there are no skeptical arguments concerning causation and induction in Book I Part III of the Treatise Graciela De Pierris presents a detailed reading of the skeptical argument she finds there and how this argument initiates a train of skeptical reasoning that begins in Part III and culminates in Part IV This reasoning is framed by Hume's version of the modern theory of ideas developed by Descartes and Locke The skeptical implications of this theory however do not arise as in traditional interpretations of Hume's skepticism from the veil of perception They arise from Hume's elaboration of a presentational phenomenological model of ultimate evidence according to which there is always a justificatory gap between what is or has been immediately presented to the mind and any ideas that go beyond it This happens paradigmatically in the causal inductive inference and as De Pierris argues in demonstrative inference as well Yet in spite of his firm commitment to radical skepticism Hume also accepts the naturalistic standpoint of science and common life and he does so on the novel interpretation presented here because of an equally firm commitment to Newtonian science in general and the Newtonian inductive method in particular Hume defends the Newtonian method against the mechanical philosophy while simultaneously rejecting all attempts including those of the Newtonians to find a place for the supernatural within our understanding of nature
