Cellular Aspects Of Hypertension:

Cellular Aspects of Hypertension Giacomo Bruschi, Alberico Borghetti, 2013-04-17 In the last two decades investigations at the cellular level have progressively gained ground in the context of hypertension research This choice of approach is due to some extent to the build up of know how that molecular and cellular biology have been producing at a continuous rate As the contents list of this volume shows a large mass of work has been directed to gaining some insight into pathogenetic mechanisms The pathogenesis of primary hypertension has been progressively categorized as a distinct biological problem not amenable to the theoretical models that proved successful in understanding the nature of secondary forms of hypertension At the same time great efforts have been made to simplify this problem by sorting out if possible a few crucial mechanisms from the network of contributory factors in the regulation of blood pressure The idea that what is to be sought is a primary structural and or functional fault in arterial muscle has met with widespread acceptance The strength of this argument lies in the fact that peripheral vascular resistance is increased in all forms of hypertension and in turn the diameter of resistance vessels is the dominant factor in the computation of total peripheral resistance On the basis of this cardiovascular structural adaptation was proposed as a positive feedback mechanism tending to maintain hypertension once begun whatever the initiating factor is

Cellular Aspects of Hypertension Giacomo Bruschi, 1991-01-01 Cellular and Molecular Mechanisms in Hypertension Robert H. Cox, 2013-03-08 Hypertension is recognized to be one of the major risk factors for the development of peripheral vascular disease The last decade has witnessed several major advances in therapy for hypertension including the development of angiotensin converting enzyme inhibitors and calcium channel blockers These compounds have greatly improved the ability to control blood pressure and to reduce the impact of this risk factor on morbidity and mortality In spite of these advances cardiovascular disease remains a major health problem in most modern industrialized countries with related deaths exceeding those from all other causes combined In contrast to these advances in therapy our understanding of the basic mechanisms responsible for the pathogenesis of hypertension remains incomplete Recent studies have produced new insights into the nature of the regulation of muscle contraction in both heart and blood vessels as well as the changes in muscle function that occur in hypertension However the effects of antihypertensive therapy both in terms of restoring normal function and in producing reversal of hypertension associated changes has not been as thoroughly studied especially in the vasculature Studies in the heart suggest that the efficacy of different therapeutic agents in restoring normal function and reversing hypertensive changes vary substantially with the mechanism of action of the therapeutic agent It has also been recently determined that some therapeutic agents produce adverse effects on plasma lipid profiles which could lead to the secondary acceleration of the atherosclerotic process while at the same time normalizing blood pressure
