Understanding the integrity of Queensland's coal seam gas wells: Cements, steels and microbial activity

This project will bring together information on materials used in cements and casings in coal seam gas (CSG) wells, and subsurface microbial processes, to improve the community's understanding of well integrity in Queensland.

Key points

- Growth in the CSG industry in Queensland has seen a significant increase in the number of wells drilled for petroleum exploration and production.
- Communities and landholders have concerns about the integrity of the wells, especially the environmental risks from leaking reservoir fluids and aquifer contamination.
- This study aims to address knowledge gaps in the community's understanding of steels, cements and microbial processes.
- This desktop study gathers information from completion reports for wells largely drilled in the Bowen and Surat basins. Information will be translated to more accessible forms, and we will hold two community meetings.

The growth in the CSG industry in Queensland over the past two decades has seen a significant increase in the number of CSG wells drilled in the state.

Community and landholder groups in QLD have concerns about potential failures in the integrity of CSG wells, and the possibility of failed wells contaminating underground aquifers and leaking gas. Communities have asked for more information on the integrity of CSG wells.

CSIRO's Gas Industry Social and Environmental Research Alliance (GISERA) has undertaken a study bringing together knowledge about well integrity, including information on cements and steels used in well casings, and the microbial processes that may damage CSG wells.

Research objectives

This research project aims to improve the community's understanding of well integrity. GISERA researchers will capture current and historic information on steels, cements and microbial processes that may impact CSG well infrastructure in Queensland.

This is a desktop study, based on data from well completion reports. Information on the composition of cement and steels used in CSG wells is contained in well completion reports submitted by the operating companies. Because most of the CSG wells in Queensland are drilled in the Surat and Bowen basins, the information will be largely gathered from well completion reports in these two basins. Researchers will then identify trends in cement and casing materials used in CSG wells over time and, where necessary, recommend further studies.

The study will synthesise and summarise the findings in a report that is accessible, and easy to understand. There will also be a community meeting to present the findings.

Cements Research Progress 1993:

Cements Research Progress Leslie J. Struble, 1995-01-01 Lea's Chemistry of Cement and Concrete Peter Hewlett, 2003-11-12
Lea's Chemistry of Cement and Concrete deals with the chemical and physical properties of cements and concretes and their relation to the practical problems that arise in manufacture and use. As such it is addressed not only to the chemist and those concerned with the science and technology of silicate materials but also to those interested in the use of concrete in building and civil engineering construction. Much attention is given to the suitability of materials to the conditions under which concrete can excel and those where it may deteriorate and to the precautionary or remedial measures that can be adopted. First published in 1935 this is the fourth edition and the first to appear since the death of Sir Frederick Lea the original author. Over the life of the first three editions this book has become the authority on its subject. The fourth edition is edited by Professor Peter C. Hewlett, Director of the British Board of Agrement and visiting Industrial Professor in the Department of Civil Engineering at the University of Dundee. Professor Hewlett has brought together a distinguished body of international contributors to produce an edition which is a worthy successor to the previous editions.
