TERENCE CUNEO

Colby College

Theistic views in the foundations of ethics receive relatively little attention these days. While there are probably numerous reasons for this, the relative neglect of these positions is, at first blush, somewhat surprising. After all, on the face of it, theistic views in ethics promise considerable advantages vis-à-vis their non-theistic counterparts. For one thing, theistic views appear capable of capturing handily the robustly realist appearances of moral thought and practice, including the categorical bindingness of moral obligation. For another, such views appear to be able to explain why we have reason to care about being moral, as they closely connect – to use Kant’s terminology – virtue and happiness. Given these putative advantages, one wonders: why the relative neglect?

A plausible answer is that many philosophers believe that the options for theistic ethical theories have been both exhausted and found wanting. The relevant options are usually presented as such: one can be either a theistic voluntarist or a theistic Platonist. The problem with voluntarist views are twofold. In the first place, paradigmatic instances of this position suffer from a lack of generality inasmuch as they offer a theistic account not of the moral domain in general, but only of the nature of moral obligation. Moreover, voluntarist views threaten to forfeit important aspects of the objectivity of moral obligation. For, according to paradigmatic examples of the position, the wrongness of an act-type such as being a capital murder is only contingently displayed by such an act-type – it being possible for God not to have forbidden the performance of an act-type of this kind. The problem with theistic Platonist positions, by contrast, is that they preserve the objectivity of morality only by making it difficult to see why God matters for morality. If there is an objective moral domain that exists independently of the will or nature of God, it seems that God’s role is at most to convey moral truths to us or to ensure that human agents get their just deserts.

Fundamental to Linda Zagzebski’s Divine Motivation Theory is the contention that the options for theistic ethical theories have not been exhausted.¹ In Zagzebski’s view, there is a virtue-based theistic view – to this point almost entirely overlooked by philosophers – that deserves the attention of non-theists and theists alike. Non-theists should take note of the view’s explanatory power, for, if correct, it promises to deliver a great deal of what most ethical theories have endeavoured to capture. Theists should find the position congenial for several reasons. If correct, the view offers a general account of the moral domain that preserves both the objectivity of morality and makes God

The other members of the Classics Club are equally as fascinating. Bunny Corcoran is a wealthy and spoiled young man who is always looking for a good time. Charles Tavis is a quiet and reserved young man who is deeply in love with Henry. Camilla Macaulay is a beautiful and intelligent young woman who is drawn to the power and danger of the Classics Club. The students are all deeply in love with Morrow, and they are willing to do anything to please him.
