Disputable Decisions in Special Education William M. Cruickshank, 1986 Tackles issues that cause dissension among educators policy makers and advocates for those who have handicaps Education and Training in Mental Retardation, 1992 Comprehensive Administration of Special Education Richard S. Podemski, 1995 The NIE Conference on Basic Mathematical Skills and Learning, 1977 The History of Inclusion in the United States Robert L. Osgood, 2005 As a significant term inclusion came into use relatively recently in the long history of special education in the United States Since the 1800s when children with disabilities first were segregated for instruction in public schools professionals and parents have called for more equitable normal treatment of these students and for closer contact with their nondisabled peers Through the years the central issues of the discussions between educators and parents have focused on who should be considered disabled and who should bear responsibility for planning and providing for their education The History of Inclusion in the United States traces the antecedents of this ongoing debate to answer questions about what inclusion is how it came to be and where it might go In this comprehensive study author Robert L Osgood reveals how the idea of inclusion has evolved into broader realms of thought and practice In its earliest manifestations educators dwelled upon the classroom setting itself wondering whether disabled children belonged there if not why not and if so how this could be accomplished By the late 1960s the scope of the discussion had shifted to assess the comprehensive structures of special education and its relationship with general education The History of Inclusion seamlessly follows this progression into the present decade in which current educational policy questions the need for any sort of separate special education in principle and structure administrators The existing research indicates that due process procedures are costly contentious and negatively impact the human and financial resources of school districts Furthermore due process requests continue to rise across Connecticut I find that cost time stressed parent district relationships the burden of proof and the perceived bias of independent hearing officers are factors that influence the decision making of special education administrators Consequently special education administrators appear compelled to settle disputes through mediation Participants reported having discretion while working with parents during PPT meetings and the early stages of due process procedures including mediation I find they act as street level bureaucrats using their discretion to build relationships negotiate and compromise with parents and build district programs in an effort to manage their clientele I find high performing districts reported a higher number of due process requests and a higher frequency of mediations Lower performing districts reported fewer due process and mediation requests In these districts families with limited resources reportedly rely on free legal aid to resolve disputes Policy makers should consider making the following changes to special education dispute resolution procedures a align state and federal special education law which would place the burden of proof on the party seeking relief b communicate a clear understanding of FAPE to stakeholders and c allow impartial mediators to provide guidance to hearing officers regarding the merits of a due process request Future research should examine the effect mediated agreements have on special education expenditures
