

Filling the cake

Have you ever sliced a cake, filled it with buttercream frosting, put it back together again, and found that none of the layers now seem to fit properly? Here's a little trick to stop that from happening.

1. Before you slice the cake into layers, make a frosting mark down the side of the cake (Fig. c). You can mark it with a knife cut, but I prefer to use frosting since I tend to lose the cut mark in a flurry of crumbs.
2. Slice your cake into layers and spread frosting over the top of the base layer. Place the next layer on top of the bottom one—and here's the trick—line up the frosting marks with each other. If you have a third layer, repeat the procedure, again lining up the frosting marks (Fig. d).
3. Ensure that the layers are even (Fig. e).

Covering with buttercream

When covering a cake with buttercream frosting, cover the sides first. This allows you to hold the top of the cake steady with your other hand without getting too sticky. Spread the frosting around the sides and over the top (Fig. f).

“Setting up” and avoiding crumbs

If you coat your cake with a thin covering of frosting then place it in the refrigerator for a couple of hours to “set up” before covering it with a second, final coating, you will help yourself in two ways. First, it prevents crumbs from being dragged around the surface of the cake. Second, it stops the cake from moving as you frost it. This is especially useful when coating tall cakes such as the Puppet on a String (see pages 56–7) and Candy House (see pages 58–9).
