Federal Capital Offenses Congressional Research Service, 2014-11-18 Murder is a federal capital offense if committed in any of more than 50 jurisdictional settings The Constitution defines the circumstances under which the death penalty may be considered a sentencing option With an eye to those constitutional boundaries the Federal Death Penalty Act and related statutory provisions govern the procedures under which the death penalty is imposed Some defendants are ineligible for the death penalty regardless of the crimes with which they are accused Children and those incompetent to stand trial may not face the death penalty pregnant women and the mentally retarded may not be executed There is no statute of limitations for murder and the time constraints imposed by the due process and speedy trial clauses of the Constitution are rarely an impediment to prosecution The decision to seek or forgo the death penalty in a federal capital case must be weighed by the Justice Department's Capital Review Committee and approved by the Attorney General Defendants convicted of murder are death eligible only if they are found at a separate sentencing hearing to have acted with life threatening intent Among those who have capital punishment may be imposed only if the sentencing jury unanimously concludes that the aggravating circumstances that surround the murder and the defendant outweigh the mitigating circumstances to an extent that justifies execution The Federal Death Penalty Act provides several specific aggravating factors such as murder of a law enforcement officer or multiple murders committed at the same time It also permits consideration of any relevant non statutory aggravating factors Impact on the victim's family and future dangerousness of the defendant are perhaps the most commonly invoked non statutory aggravating factors The jury must agree on the existence of at least one of the statutory aggravating factors if the defendant is to be sentenced to death The Federal Death Penalty Act permits consideration of any relevant mitigating factor and identifies a few such as the absence of prior criminal record or

Capital Punishment James A. McCafferty, 2017-07-12 Numerous people face legal execution in the United States Their presence in death rows throughout the country refutes a basic premise of our judicial system for the use of capital punishment denies the existence of universal rehabilitation There is another paradox juries continue to sentence men and women to death yet few ever get executed Whether one is for or against capital punishment one cannot approach the issue without deep emotion and conviction James McCafferty provides an even tempered eminently reasonable discussion of the issue with balanced commentary from both sides of the debate McCafferty presents not only empirical data and analyses of the nature of capital punishment but provides perspectives on the larger issues of our approach to lawbreakers and their rehabilitation The claims of both those who want to retain capital punishment and those who want to abolish it are included The arguments consider whether capital punishment deters crime as well as the question of discrimination A wealth of references an extremely useful bibliography and a final chapter delineating the legal issues facing the courts at the time the book was originally published in 1972 complete this unusually incisive and balanced study Capital Punishment remains an important volume in the field of criminal justice It seeks to educate rather than propagandize It is intended for use in numerous courses in sociology and political science as well as in law schools Anyone wishing to gain a perspective on what remains a controversial issue more than thirty years later would be well advised to study this work by world class scholars
