

That was a miffy bit of verbal fireworks, but Adam knew there had to be more to her story. Before the birthday party, he decided, he'd discover what it was. "You have an interesting attitude for someone so young, Katie."

Her smile dimmed, but didn't go out. "I haven't been young since I was six years old." Surprised ahead of him, she unlocked the door and pushed it open. "Thanks," she said and he heard the rush of her breath, the sweet anxiety in her voice. "You're welcome," he answered as he set the books inside. When he straightened to face her, the air was thick with a tension he recognized, an awareness he'd been trying to ignore all day, with little success. "Katie," he began, not sure what he wanted to say. "I'm glad Lisa Fairchild gave me your name and number."

She bit her lip, brushed restlessly at her mop of dark curls, a gesture born of the awareness and tenderly compelling in its unselfconscious appeal. "Look, Adam, you have to listen to me for a minute. Really listen. I can't let you leave thinking I'm—"

Adam seldom acted on impulse, but he bent his head and pressed a very impulsive, claiming kiss to Katie's parted lips, interrupting her in mid-sentence and surprising her only slightly less than he'd surprised himself. She recovered more quickly than he did and then, even more surprisingly, returned his kiss with a gratifying enthusiasm. She seemed, in fact, to savor the feel of his lips on hers, the tantalizing brush of her body against his, the undeniable evidence that he was, after all, a very desirable man. Her hands flew to her cheeks, her eyes wide against his, his thumbs where her fingers worked a little more forcefully through the weight of his suit coat. He wanted to take the coat off, but that would mean leaving her something on his arms—now that they were bare. Her body slid to her waist and pulled her, and he found he even knew that was his body's response. When the kiss broke, he realized he could not resist. She looked as dared as he felt. "Wow." Her whispered judgment seconded his own and he reached for her again, but she held him off with a firm hand pressed against the buttoned pocket of his shirt. "It's not that I wouldn't enjoy doing that again, you understand, but one too many of these could dangerously overload my risk quota to enjoy." She drew in a long, shaky breath. "A good night kiss was not at all how I expected tonight to end."

"Believe it or not, I'm a little surprised, myself." Her lips curved with a wry, self-effacing humor. "Oh, I believe you."
"I realize it's a breach of your strictly-professional policy, but I can't bring myself to apologize for something I enjoyed so much."

She took hold of the doorknob, as if she needed its support. "Well, you don't have to worry about that strictly professional thing anymore because...because I won't be planning your granddaddy's funeral. I'm sorry, but I just can't do it." She offered a small smile. "But, honestly, thanks for to-
