

DP - Capability and Comparison

Comparison of the dynamic positioning (DP) ratings of ships is commonly made but not always understood.

This ESCA overview briefly outlines the main points relating to DP notation and to provide the reader with some context when considering comparison between ships and their DP ratings.

Readers seeking a more comprehensive understanding of DP matters should refer to the IMO "Guidelines for Vessels with Dynamic Positioning Systems" (Circular 645), Classification Societies' rules & standards, published literature from organisations such as the International Marine Contractors Association (IMCA) e.g. and other authoritative sources.

Some basics:

- A dynamically positioned vessel means a unit or a vessel which automatically maintains its position (fixed location or predetermined track) exclusively by means of thruster force.
- DP requirements are set by Classification Societies interpreting the guidance provided by IMO Circular 645.
- IMO DP equipment class identifies the degree of redundancy the system provides; i.e. 1, 2 or 3. Classification Societies provide their own notation relating to the IMO equipment class to allow for differences in Classification Societies' rules, and any exemptions made.
- Redundancy means the ability of a component or system to maintain or restore its function when a single failure has occurred.
- Redundancy can be achieved for instance by installation of multiple components, systems or alternative means of performing a function.
- Failure mode effect analysis and capability assessments in a range of defined environmental conditions are key factors in any assessment of a DP vessel.

IMO Requirements and Classification Societies:

In respect of DP, ships are surveyed by classification societies during build and operation to standards compliant with the Class rules and the requirements of IMO, Flag State and industry. The classification societies define their interpretation of the IMO guidelines with different notation terminology. For instance, Lloyds Register use class notation of DP1, DP2 and DP3 while DNV use the terms DYNPOS, DYNPOS AUT, DYNPOS AUTR similarly. Other classification societies use different class notation.

For simplicity the Lloyds Register notation is used in this note, as it aligns with the colloquial expression used in most DP discussions.

In 1977 Det Norske Veritas (DNV, now DNV GL) established the Environmental Regularity Number (ERN) to indicate the effectiveness of a DP system under metocean conditions. In 2016 DNV GL introduced a new DP Capability Standard (DNVGL-ST-0111 – Assessment of Station Keeping Capability of Dynamic Positioning Vessels) with the stated objective of providing a unified standard for industry. It addresses both the intact vessel condition and the worst-case single failure conditions corresponding to the vessel's Dynamic Positioning class notation.
