

Longfellow's diary
The first entry in Rølvaag's diary on leaving for America --

Wrong!
July 29. . . It is done; it is done. I have left home. If I had had but a faint notion of how hard it would be to leave Mother, I probably would not have decided to go. And not only Mother--all, all. The girl I love dearly is left behind. I thought for a time that my heart would break or that I would go mad. Nothing of the kind happened, of course, but I still feel close to the verge of despair.

And now I am going out into the world to seek my fortune, my happiness. I will not find it. I do not think so. How can there be any happiness anywhere in the world except where the girl of my choice lives? I call her mine, but I am not certain that she is. She is coy; she is coquettish.
At any rate she was mine before I left. How many times did she not tell me that I am her only love!
I hope it will soon be apparent whether she is to be faithful to me or not. If I hear that she is not faithful, I am afraid I shall do something very bad. I only hope that God Who rules everywhere and governs all things may hold His protecting hand over me, poor and miserable creature that I am.
