Diary Of A Hobo:

Diary of a Hobo Bill Jodrey, 2002-01 Bill Jodrey was 19 years old when he realized what a burden he was on his family It was 1932 in the midst of the Great Depression On the spur of the moment Jodrey decided to hitchhike and hobo his way across the country with 20 in his pocket and no preconceived notions of what to expect A good listener he has a ready smile that makes him quick to like Throughout his journey people of all ages sexes and walks of life would open up to him Much of what he writes in Diary of a Hobo is their story It also is history and his story filled with the unexpected that included Surprisingly warm acceptance by most people along the way A few stays in jail Accidents and tragedies including the near beheading and death of a young boy A sudden sexual encounter Several jam sessions with him at the harmonica in freight cars or in hobo camps Several religious experiences The demeaning necessity of begging for food Two heart rending encounters with parents who had lost sons his age At age 84 mostly to keep a friend company Jodrey became part of one of the earliest online community publishing groups They called themselves the SilverStringers because all were senior citizens and they have been publishing the Melrose Mirror monthly since 1996 at <http://silverstringer.media.mit.edu> with the assistance of the MIT Media Laboratory Jodrey tried his hand at a short story about a hobo episode accompanied by a charming sketch and got such a reaction that he wrote another and another and another It was suggested he write a book At age 86 he started and completed this 28 chapter book Sketch by Bill Jodrey Humor is a natural part of Jodrey and of his stories reflecting encounters with people animals and insects along the way Jodrey s smooth understated style is well suited to telling the little heard human poignant side of the Great Depression People who took to the roads and rails in the early 1930 s generally did so out of necessity as was the case with Jodrey They had no jobs at home and their families had no means to feed them So they struck out hoping to find better circumstances somewhere anywhere Hoboes later in the 30 s tended to be a different breed ruffians radicals prostitutes and misfits The numbers swelled from thousands in Jodrey s time to as many as 1.5 million in the US only a few years later People who met hoboes along the way often tended to empathize with them Jodrey found These people knew they could be in the same boat Hoboes generally were treated with more openness and kindness than today s homeless The non hobo often was fascinated by what he or she perceived as the hobo s romantic lifestyle The stories in this book are real They are not overstated They are a lens through which a little told side of the Depression story is related not from Wall Street but from the highways and the byways of cities and small towns from the prairies and the hills in the diners and at the churches in private homes automobiles trucks and freight cars It is an uplifting depiction of a time when compassion was more than a word in a slogan It is storytelling in the best sense of the tradition because we learn so much by sharing in what Jodrey saw heard and felt What follows is a synopsis of chapters in Diary of a Hobo CHAPTER 1 Jodrey discovers he has wanderlust at age 5 This chapter describes Jodrey s personality as a young man including his love of the outdoors and of trains and provides a couple of tantalizing stories about his later life as a hobo

CHAPTER 2 The youngest of seven he tells of life growing up in a small city north of Boston It s of fond memories and hard work until the realization comes at age 19 that he is a burden to his parents who can barely makes ends meet because of the Depression CHAPTER 3 Jodrey gets a ride with two friends to Washington Leaves from a Hobo's Diary, Or, How to Travel Without Money Hobo,1911 Leaves From a Hobo's Diary, Or, How to Travel Without Money [microform]
