calm Cunard unfinished by Samuel Beckett More info www.rubbereden.com Sometimes Grief: Barks up the Wrong Tree Vincent Quatroche, 2011-12-07 The title for this collection of prose and poetry Sometimes Grief barks up the wrong tree came to me in the late Spring of 2011 during an ensuing period of significant change and a series of disappointing struggles with some of the more harsh realities of life The passing of my Father on Easter Sunday was hardly an unanticipated event His decline was for the most part mercifully brief and he left the earth with loved ones present in his own home and quite peacefully The rituals of saying goodbye were observed with the usual decorum and to be honest That part of dealing with the inevitable demise of life of a beloved father was actually a quiet sort of sad comfort in the memory of a good man and vibrant artist I thought I was adjusted to that Not so What ensued on a personal level was a real old fashion shit storm of confusion doubt despondency and loss Normal you say To be expected Perhaps On the surface maybe but such a world of chaos descended that it virtually affected every aspect of my life And then one late Spring morning after teaching a class at a local community college a phrase resounded in my mind as clear as a bell Sometimes grief barks of the wrong tree It was a revelation really Surely not an answer to anything merely a sort of internal realization A recognition I was in fact grieving angry and ashamed that my intense personal feelings of sadness and loss were not wholly directed to my Dad being gone No I was furious the world with all of its confusion contradictions and uncertainties that had encroached upon what I perceived should have the appropriate grief towards my recent loss I felt my emotional interior had been hijacked by worldly concerns Someone or something was diverting and demanding my attention and energy towards a dead end of self centered remorse regret and devastation Intellectually I accepted even understood someone very close to me had left Died But I discovered much to my embarrassment that I was ill equipped to deal with the more collateral damage of the off the rack influence of others in my life and while it was true I once cared deeply about them I now had to face the unpleasant truth that the relationship with them had now gone toxic and was damaging and draining my strength to move on to the next chapter of my life I couldnt let it go And the same time it was like holding a burning white hot ember in the palm of my hand I responded by closing my hand into a fist and holding the pain tighter I ran wildly with it quitting long time teaching positions that represented normalcy purpose and economic stability In short I was gutting my life Serving every tie except the right one I was determined to hold on steadfast to that smoldering coal in my fist I wondered what would come first It would simply burn out or burn a whole through my flesh At this point I must make this clear There was yet a third level to the grief I felt I was being delusional Indulging in private pointless emotional suicide I was trying to kill my feelings while entire world out there had real problems Serious tangible sorrows and pains that dwarfed my perceived issues and again I was ashamed at my transparent mini drama I was perpetrating upon myself Shutting it all down inside myself switch by switch My mothers situation for example certainly could be taken into account She had lost her husband and life companion of over fifty years and now at an advanced age herself had to deal with his absence on daily basis in the family home they shared practically their entire adult lives I've provided a unique perspective into her own experience in dealing with grief in the section of this collection entitled The Edna Variations. So I did the usual self-medicating prescriptions that depressed individuals do. With a vengeance. Thankfully I eventually grew bored with that. So I returned to an old friend. My oldest friend. My self-expression.

New Zealand Patent Office Journal New Zealand. Patent Office, 1918 Another Rubber Eden Vincent Quatroche, 1998

Vincent Quatroche's collection of poems and stories are artfully rendered, bitter-sweet and at times disturbing. The works included in this collection are involving presentations that resurrect poignant images of human experience. Previously Quatroche's prose was presented in a verbal audio montage via cassettes. The transition here to the page of those pieces and much more has been quite successful. Working in the context of the post-modern world, Quatroche's works range from the sentimental and melancholic treatments of love and relationships to insightful portrayals of the everyday to critical parodies of the techno-consumer society. Although inspired by personal experience and reflections, they touch on common sentiments, human universals, and shared dilemmas from the inside of human existence. This collection is an examination of common life, the taken-for-granted, the hidden and repressed contradictions of our experience. At times in some poems and passages the text reads like Thomas Hart Benton's paintings look. This collection emanates an aura of our beginnings in oral discourse before the written word when time was slower. In order to appreciate the emotional terrain of this collection, one must surrender to the ordinary world, not unlike listening to neighbors' story-sharing in personal and private, covering social and psychological terrain. It poses opportunities for sorrow and celebration, agreement and difference, laughter and compassion. A certain quality of intangibility reverberates like an echo in the reader's consciousness. There are some intensely original images rendered here that communicate something distinctly human in an increasingly impersonal world. Dr. Joseph Chilberg, Associate Professor of Communication, SUNY Fredonia, NY. When Vincent Quatroche's voice begins to scratch the groove, you realize you've had an itch you didn't know about. Maybe you would rather not know that itch, but Vincent does not care. Either way, he's going to keep doing what he's been doing these past couple decades, putting down the best writing in the United States, unassuming, cutting, hilarious. Real poems from a real poet. Bob Holman, Nuyorican Poet, NYC. Quatroche is primarily an oral poet, influenced by and working in the tradition of Whitman, Sandburg, Ginsberg, Ferlinghetti, Ken Nordine, Tom Waits, Charles Bukowski, and similar experimenters in the American oral tradition. His work expresses a strong element of social criticism, sometimes angry, sometimes ironic or absurd, with the element of the highly personal and lyrical. One of his greatest strengths is the effective use of telling details and powerful images and metaphors to bring us face-to-face with our foibles, our failures, and our loves. David Lunde, Internationally published and recognized poet, translator, 1992 Rhysling Award recipient, five-time Nebula Award nominee, Director of Creative Writing Program, State University of New York, Fredonia. The work included in this volume represents in part twenty years of self-expression, reflection, and observation. Rather than launch into a dramatic monologue that might be given by a dying blond Replicant as heard in the finale of Blade Runner, I can only remark that I lack the discipline inclination and disposition that cultivating a widely spread cultural exposure demands of a creative individual with aspirations I find most self promotion at this somatic level of expression pretentious vulgar and distasteful Perhaps it is a matter of the basic question of why an individual succumbs to the desire to create in the first place Whatever my talent is or can be defined as a poet it certainly is not as a purveyor of self I am haunted by the question if one creates for the market place then do they simply become another product for consumption in that market place I know more about what I am not than what
