Correctional Treatment of the Offender Albert R. Roberts, 1974 The Effectiveness of Correctional Treatment
Douglas Lipton, Robert Martinson, Judith Wilks, 1975 This is a compilation of descriptions of English language research studies conducted between 1945 and 1967 to evaluate the treatment of criminal and juvenile offenders Each of the 231 studies has been annotated and classed into categories Study findings are classified according to eleven treatment methods independent variables and seven desired areas of change dependent variables The independent variables include imprisonment parole casework and individual counselling milieu therapy and medical methods The dependent variables discussed are recidivism institutional adjustment vocational adjustment educational achievement drug and alcohol re addiction personality and attitude change and community adjustment Source NCJRS adapted Correctional Treatment Clemens Bartollas, 1985

Justice, Punishment, Treatment; the Correctional Process Leonard Orland, 1973 This book provides a comprehensive overview of the methods used in the Criminal Justice system in the United States to counsel and treat offenders It provides complete coverage of the history and structure of corrections and offers a balanced account of the issues facing the field so that readers can arrive at informed opinions regarding the process The Sex Offender:

Corrections, treatment, and legal practice Barbara K. Schwartz, Henry R. Cellini, 1995 Correctional Counseling and Treatment Peter C. Kratcoski, 2000 Provides information on a number of treatment techniques used in American corrections These techniques can be used in community or institutional programmes and with juvenile or adult offenders Offers current research on anger management juvenile offenders mediation community based treatments special areas of correctional treatment alcohol and drug abuse and reality therapy Classification of Offenders as an Aid to Efficient Management and Effective Treatment Marguerite Q. Warren, 1967 Alternative classification typologies are described and illustrated with a number of clinical and research studies A cross tabulation of sixteen typological systems was presented and six cross classification bands were identified The six bands or offender subtypes were entitled asocial conformist antisocial manipulator neurotic subcultural identifier and situational offender It was pointed out that the consistency in the data of several typological studies which made the cross classification possible is an encouraging sign In asking whether a typological consensus has any programmatic utility at the present time current interest among practitioners in developing differential treatment strategies for various types of offenders was noted It was suggested that it may be possible in the near future to make differential diagnoses of large populations and to simplify the training of correctional workers by teaching management and treatment specialties rather than the entire range of correctional techniques The use of differential diagnosis in decision making along the correctional continuum and its potential value as a treatment unifying influence was discussed Originally published as an article in the Journal Of Criminal Law Criminology and Police Science v 62 n 1 1971 p 239 258 Essentials of Community Corrections Robert D. The Treatment of Criminal Offenders Michael Dow Burkhead,2007-05-28 From drilling holes into the skulls of prisoners to solitary confinement to deploying a range of psychological therapies society has attempted to deal with the problem of criminals in myriad ways over the last few centuries This analytical history explores the ever changing approaches to punishing wrongdoers and preventing further offenses the philosophical beliefs underlying them and their relative effects It discusses such core issues as the role of free will and determination the root causes of crime and the effects of studying crimes versus studying criminals It highlights the continuous debate regarding rehabilitation and punishment the history of biologically and psychologically based treatments and the principles of effective intervention concluding with discussion of what lies ahead Document Retrieval Index ,1974

Assessing Correctional Rehabilitation Francis T. Cullen,Paul Gendreau,2012-07-17 A theme that has persisted throughout the history of American corrections is that efforts should be made to reform offenders In particular at the beginning of the 1900s the rehabilitative ideal was enthusiastically trumpeted and helped to direct the renovation of the correctional system e g implementation of indeterminate sentencing parole probation a separate juvenile justice system For the next seven decades offender treatment reigned as the dominant correctional philosophy Then in the early 1970s rehabilitation suffered a precipitous reversal of fortune The larger disruptions in American society in this era prompted a general critique of the state run criminal justice system Rehabilitation was blamed by liberals for allowing the state to act coercively against offenders and was blamed by conservatives for allowing the state to act leniently toward offenders In this context the death knell of rehabilitation was seemingly sounded by Robert Martinson's 1974b influential 'nothing works' essay which reported that few treatment programs reduced recidivism. This review of evaluation studies gave legitimacy to the antitreatment sentiments of the day; it ostensibly proved what everyone already knew: Rehabilitation did not work. In the subsequent quarter century, a growing revisionist movement has questioned Martinson's portrayal of the empirical status of the effectiveness of treatment interventions. Through painstaking literature reviews, these revisionist scholars have shown that many correctional treatment programs are effective in decreasing recidivism. More recently, they have undertaken more sophisticated quantitative syntheses of an increasing body of evaluation studies through a technique called meta-analysis. These meta-analyses reveal that across evaluation studies, the recidivism rate is on average 10 percentage points lower for the treatment group than for the control group. However, this research has also suggested that some correctional interventions have no effect on offender criminality, e.g., punishment-oriented programs, while others achieve substantial reductions in recidivism, i.e., approximately 25 percent. This variation in program success has led to a search for those principles that distinguish effective treatment interventions from ineffective ones. There is theoretical and empirical support for the conclusion that the rehabilitation programs that achieve the greatest reductions in recidivism use cognitive-behavioral treatments, target known predictors of crime for change, and intervene mainly with high-risk offenders. Multisystemic treatment is a concrete example of an effective program that largely conforms to these principles. In the time ahead, it would appear prudent that correctional policy and practice be evidence-based. Knowledgeable about the extant research, policymakers would embrace the view that rehabilitation programs informed by the principles of effective intervention can work to reduce recidivism and thus can help foster public safety. By reaffirming rehabilitation, they would also be pursuing a policy that is consistent with public opinion research showing that Americans continue to believe that offender treatment should be an integral goal of the correctional system.

Effective Correctional Treatment Robert R. Ross, Paul Gendreau, 1980. This collection of papers discusses effective correctional treatment of offenders by examining topics such as diversion programs, interventions with the families of delinquents, community-based programs for juvenile offenders, programs for juveniles in correctional institutions, and programs for adult offenders. Collectively, these papers provide evidence that correctional rehabilitation is possible.

Introduction to Corrections David H. McElreath, Linda Keena, Greg Etter, Ellis Stuart, Jr., 2011-07-27. Millions in our nation are under some type of judicial sanction, with some individuals behind bars, but the majority serving their sentences while living and working among us. Introduction to Corrections examines predominant issues related to the system of administering to offenders in the United States. Written in a simple, concise style and enhanced with discussion questions and a list of key terms in each chapter, this volume begins with an overview of the system and a historical review and then focuses on select issues including sentencing goals and rationales and types of sentencing, noncustodial supervision including probation, electronic monitoring, home confinement, halfway houses, and offender registration, parole, and postconfinement release, jail.

Corrections United States. National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals,1973 The Commission recommends specific standards in pursuit of the achievement of six major goals for the improvement of the American correctional system The American correctional system today appears to offer minimum protection for the public and maximum harm to the offender The National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals in its report on corrections has proposed about 140 standards designed to change that situation The standards spell out in detail where why how and what improvements can and should be made in the corrections segment of the criminal justice system This report is a reference work for the correctional professional as well as for the interested layman Among its goals the commission urges that disparities in sentencing be removed and justice in corrections be upheld by measures guaranteeing offenders rights during and after incarceration The scope of corrections can and should be narrowed by diverting many juveniles and sociomedical cases alcoholics drug addicts prostitutes and the mentally disturbed to noncorrectional treatment programs and by decriminalizing certain minor offenses such as public drunkenness and vagrancy Another goal states that probation should become the standard criminal sentence retaining confinement chiefly for dangerous offenders and releasing a majority of offenders to improved and extended community based programs Corrections should undergo a planned integration into the total criminal justice system with each state unifying all correctional functions and programs for adults and juveniles within its executive branch
