Demand For Health:

The Demand for Health Michael Grossman, 2017-08-08 A seminal work in health economics first published in 1972 Michael Grossman's The Demand for Health introduced a new theoretical model for determining the health status of the population His work uniquely synthesized economic and public health knowledge and has catalyzed a vastly influential body of health economics literature It is well past time to bring this important work back into print Grossman bases his approach on Gary S Becker's household production function model and his theory of investment in human capital Consumers demand health which can include illness free days in a given year or life expectancy and then produce it through the input of medical care services diet other market goods and services and time Grossman also treats health and knowledge as equal parts of the durable stock of human capital Consumers therefore have an incentive to invest in health to increase their earnings in the future From here Grossman examines complementarities between health capital and other forms of human capital the most important of which is knowledge capital earned through schooling and its effect on the efficiency of production He concludes that the rate of return on investing in health by increasing education may exceed the rate of return on investing in health through greater medical care Higher income may not lead to better health outcomes as wealth enables the consumption of goods and services with adverse health effects These are some of the major revelations of Grossman's model findings that have great relevance as we struggle to understand the links between poverty education structural disadvantages and health

The Theory of Demand for Health Insurance John A. Nyman, 2003 Why do people buy health insurance Conventional theory holds that people purchase insurance because they prefer the certainty of paying a small premium to the risk of getting sick and paying a large medical bill This book presents a new theory of consumer demand for health insurance It holds that people purchase insurance to obtain additional income when they become ill

The Law and Policy of Healthcare Financing Wolf Sauter, Jos Boertjens, Johan van Manen, Misja Mikkers, 2019 Examining the ways and extent to which systemic factors affect health outcomes with regard to quality affordability and access to curative healthcare this explorative book compares tax funded Beveridge systems and insurance based Bismarck systems Containing contributions from national experts The Law and Policy of Healthcare Financing charts and compares the merits of healthcare systems throughout 11 countries from the UK to Colombia

A Dynamic Demand for Medical Care Jennifer Leigh Kohn, 2009 I develop a theoretical model to explain observed patterns of medical care demand and test the hypothesis that demand is greater the greater the decline in health at any level of health Medical care demand is highly skewed the top 5% of individuals consume nearly 50% of expenditures and nearly half of lifetime expenditures occur after age 65 Extant economic models don't explain this behavior For example Murphy I model depreciation as an amount rather than a rate and I allow the health state to increase health production Contrary to the Grossman model the resulting demand for health suggests an inevitable disequilibrium as health declines between increasing benefits and declining costs of health capital that individuals can only balance by increasing medical care The time path for medical care demand suggests the change in health rather than the state of health drives increasing demand and that price sensitivity declines over time I test the central hypothesis that the change in health is significant using the first 14 waves of the British Household Panel Survey BHPS I specify a non linear seemingly unrelated system of demands for consumption and medical care and impose symmetry restrictions on the cross price parameters so that inferences are consistent with utility maximization theory I identify instruments for unobservable health and price using a multiple correspondence analysis I find support for the theory and the assumption that health and wealth are not separable Results suggest single period single equation models of medical care demand omit relevant variables that capture dynamic decision making and the relationship between health and wealth
