HC 583 - Out-of-Hours GP Services in England Great Britain. Parliament. House of Commons. Committee of Public Accounts,2014 People turn to out of hours GP services when they are worried about their own health or that of family or friends and want urgent advice or treatment However the urgent and emergency care system is complex and people struggle to know which is the right service to use Patients experience of and satisfaction with the out of hours services varies significantly and unacceptably across the country as does the cost NHS England has not provided effective oversight of whether the services are providing value for money It lacks the basic information needed to understand what lies behind the variations and identify where it should intervene It has not dealt adequately with conflicts of interest which inevitably occur when many commissioners are also providers NHS England also needs to address the perverse financial incentives which get in the way of different urgent care services working effectively together It needs to examine whether the out of hours services are working properly with other services and whether the system encourages duplication when resources are so constrained At the most basic level the Department of Health and NHS England must develop information to be able to know whether there will be enough GPs to cope with the growing workload
