Colonializing Agriculture:

Colonializing Agriculture Mridula Mukherjee, 2005 This book is the first comprehensive study of the impact of colonialism on the agriculture of this very important region which apart from the Pakistani and Indian provinces of Punjab included the present day Indian provinces of Haryana and Himachal Pradesh Making extensive use of data culled from government archives and private papers in India and Britain as well as from village surveys farm accounts and family budgets the author argues that Punjab was by no means an idyllic land of prosperous peasant proprietors She maintains that it was also the land of big feudal landlords rack rented tenants and struggling small holders who were forced to enlist in the army or migrate to enable their families to pay government taxes and to repay debts Comparing Punjab with its supposed polar opposite the eastern region of Bengal and Bihar Mridula Mukherjee demonstrates that Punjab too had begun to exhibit features typical of colonial under development such as stagnation of productive forces intensification of semi feudal relations forced commercialisation and lack of capital investment in agriculture The green revolution therefore was not the result of a continuity but actually because of a break with the colonial past The Culture of Wilderness Frieda Knobloch, 1996 In this innovative work of cultural and technological history Frieda Knobloch describes how agriculture functioned as a colonizing force in the American West between 1862 and 1945 Using agricultural textbooks USDA documents and historical accounts of
