Combat Rescue Helicopters The Mh 53 Pave Lows:

Combat Rescue Helicopters Bill Sweetman, 2008 Discusses the design and equipment of the specialized Sikorsky helicopter known as the Pave Low along with its use by the U S Air Force in military missions On a Steel Horse I Ride Air University Press, 2014-01-17 Pave Low The term itself generates an image a dark wispy night a low pulsating rumble approaching from the distance The rumble becomes a presence a large helicopter that settles onto the ground amidst the deep darkness Earnest men of determination spew forth from it Heavily armed they quickly set up to collect intelligence kill enemy troops rescue downed or isolated friendly personnel or otherwise conduct a direct action mission Mission complete they just as quickly reassemble reboard the aircraft and then disappear into the consuming darkness It is a powerful image a conjure if you will that strikes fear into any enemy of the United States But the conjure is real It is a helicopter called the MH 53J M That machine is the end result of the evolution of state of the art avionics communication and navigation equipment crewed by highly motivated enthusiastic and smart young operators well steeped in the principles heritage and credo of special operations It is the classic combination of men and machine Those aircraft and Airmen were assigned to the US Air Force Special Operations Command AFSOC America's specialized airpower a step ahead in a changing world delivering special operations power anytime anywhere 1 AFSOC controls a mixed fleet of both rotary and fixed wing aircraft to facilitate the fulfillment of that mission However the single aircraft that in its day has best epitomized that role is the Pave Low helicopter It perhaps more than any other aircraft allowed the AFSOC to realize its purpose But it was not always so The aircraft themselves were revolutionary combinations of new more powerful turbine engines with rotary wing aircraft to produce vastly increased lifting power Conceptualized built and designated for simpler missions they were immediately swept up into the long war in Southeast Asia There they proved the efficacy of the aircraft for dangerous rescue missions for the initiation of a whole new generation of developing avionics and navigation technology for providing challenging direct support to small special forces teams and indigenous forces inserted behind enemy lines and for a myriad of other things that heavy lift helicopters could be assigned to do In accomplishing all of that they also trained a whole generation of men who learned of combat along the Ho Chi Minh Trail in Laos and at other places like Quang Tri South Vietnam Son Tay North Vietnam and Koh Tang Island Cambodia After that conflict those aircraft and men were returned to peacetime locations and duties and much was forgotten of those dangerous times and missions However a cadre of dedicated combat aviators and commanders felt that the aircraft and community of Airmen had much more to give Foreseeing an ever dangerous world they harnessed those aircraft to a series of evolving new technologies that vastly improved the aircraft by giving them the ability to traverse airspace in any weather conditions day and night and to avoid enemy threats That concept was validated in operations in Panama Kuwait Iraq Serbia Afghanistan and many more smaller and quieter operations in between The men and aircraft also showed the larger utilitarian value of the aircraft as over the years they were called out many times to
