S. Marine Corps, 2011-10-03 Combat Stress is the mental emotional or physical tension strain or distress resulting from exposure to combat and combat related conditions Controlling combat stress is a command responsibility In terms of Service members lost from action and reduced performance combat stress seriously affects mission accomplishment It is a leader s responsibility to take action to strengthen Service members tolerance to combat stress and manage it in his or her unit Combat stress reactions are the result of exposure to the same conditions during military actions that cause physical injury and disease in battle or its immediate aftermath and many combat stress reactions occur in persons who are also wounded or ill with disease Rates of combat stress casualties vary greatly with higher ratios during lengthy periods of intense combat In Okinawa 1945 during a peak month of battle the combat stress casualties among Marine Forces were reported as high as one for every two wounded in action WIA Under less lengthy periods as suggested by data acquired from the Israeli Defense Forces fighting in Lebanon 1982 the ratio of combat stress casualties to WIA in small units can be as high as one to one In the past we have generally suffered as many as one battle stress casualty for every three to five WIA in heavy fighting However highly trained units with strong leadership and high esprit de corps have fewer combat stress casualties While this manual focuses on combat induced stress reactions it is important to emphasize that combat stress is not restricted only to combat but may also arise from combat like conditions present during military operations other than war In an area of operations characterized by continuous action and high danger our forces may experience high rates of stress casualties unless small unit leaders are trained and prepared to manage stress This publication is written to inform small unit leaders of stress characteristics and management techniques in order to prevent reduce identify and treat combat stress reactions in the Service member s own
