Investigation of Methodologies Used by Less-than-truckload (LTL) Motor Carriers to Determine Fuel Surcharges Keith B. Grant,John L. Kent,2007 Fuel surcharge policies are utilized by transportation companies to transfer the expense associated with fuel prices to their customers As fuel surcharges have become a significant portion of the expenses on transportation invoices an increasing number of shippers are expressing more interest in these policies The objective of this study is to discover how less than truckload LTL carriers develop and utilize fuel surcharge policies to recover their fuel expenses Thirty nine top LTL carriers were called on to explain their perspectives and methodologies with regard to fuel surcharge policies Part to whole qualitative analysis was conducted to summarize responses from a standardized interview protocol In addition 25 published fuel surcharge policies were obtained and analyzed to explore the disparities among LTL fuel surcharge policies Findings show that while carriers were reluctant to discuss their fuel surcharge development in practice there were two primary methodologies that left all carriers with very similar fuel surcharge policies The National Rural Letter Carrier ,2006 Reports of Cases Determined in the Supreme
