Chapter 1

The Antamina Mine in Peru

- 1 The ore is valuable and in demand so even though transport costs will be high the mine should still be profitable.
- 2 Rainfall and melting snow will dissolve some minerals. Sediments and dissolved minerals will move down the mountainsides and collect in the valleys. This water will be toxic to many organisms and will flow away from the mine.
- 3
  - a Further deposits have been found and the productive life of the mine has been extended by many years.
  - b It is too difficult to cover bare rock on steep slopes. The exposed rock will weather over time and may release less harmful substances. The location is so remote that the visual scar on the landscape will not be seen.

Chapter 2

Biofuels: the future of fuels or a misguided technology?

- 1 Bioethanol will mean the country is not dependent on supplies from other countries, reducing risk if there is political conflict, global price rises, a shortage of global supply. It may also be a crop with a value if exported.
- 2 It's a renewable source of energy. Fairly low technology. Different crops are suited to different regions. Absorbs carbon dioxide.
- 3 Bioethanol crops might be better suited to their land. The crop might be more profitable than food crops.

A house that needs no energy. Is it possible?

- 1 The house will only use 10% of the standard house's energy ( $1.5 \text{ dm}^2 \text{ m}^{-2}$ , rather than  $150 \text{ dm}^2$ ).

- 2 So few houses have been built in this style because:
  - it is new technology
  - not many people have the skills to build them yet
  - they are very expensive to build
  - the savings made do not outweigh the costs of building.
- 3 There will always be some energy loss, and the use of solar panels, etc., is only effective in certain weather conditions.

Chapter 3

The impact of wind erosion

- 1
  - Unexpected drought over a number of years.
  - Soil particles were light (less water) so more easily blown about.
  - Large areas ploughed up, few windbreaks.
  - Cultivating the soil broke it up into smaller sized components.
  - Deep-rooted grasses no longer there to hold the soil.
- 2 Farmers had bought the land and wanted to grow crops to make a profit from their investment. No central control as to what was grown (and how)
- 3
  - Starvation
  - Need for large quantities of people to relocate
  - Loss of jobs
  - Impact on local ecosystem: limited topsoil, few plants, and associated impact on food web.
- 4 It prevented the land from being used for arable production and allowed it to return to grassland.

Flower power

- 1
  - a This is a (large-scale) commercial arable farm: the bulbs are being sold for profit rather than food (commercial) and there are no animals involved in the production (arable).
  - b (From Figure 3.18) There is a lack of windbreaks to slow the wind speed down. The area is very flat. (From the text) There is a large amount of organic matter that is easily blown away when dry.
