

MiniCase 10

Hollywood Goes Global

Hollywood films have always been quintessentially American products. Globalization, however, has changed the economics of the movie industry. By 2022, foreign ticket sales for Hollywood blockbusters made up over 80% of worldwide totals (or $17 billion of the total $21 billion), up from 50% in 2000. Some movies such as Transformers: Age of Extinction and The Fast and the Furious gross around 80% of their total box-office receipts overseas. Foreign sales now make or break the success of newly released big-budget movies.

Avengers: Endgame (released in 2019, with $2.8 billion in total revenues) is the second highest-grossing movie of all time. Its international performance highlights the importance of foreign sales (around 70% of the total). Produced by Marvel, it was shown in English in India and translated into three major Indian languages (Hindi, Tamil, and Telugu). Marvel even licensed an Indian Marvel Anthem by Oscar-winning Indian composer A. R. Rahman. In China, Endgame is currently the highest-grossing foreign movie. Given that Avengers was released just a few years ago, it has an excellent chance of becoming the most successful movie ever.

In the meantime, Avatar remains the highest-grossing movie to date, earning almost $3 billion since its release in 2009. Non-U.S. box-office sales account for close to 75% of that number. Avatar was hugely popular in Asia, especially in China, where the government permitted the number of movie theaters showing the film to increase from 5,000 to 35,000. Another of James Cameron's famous films, Titanic, grossed around 70% of its close to $2 billion earnings in overseas markets.

Exhibit MC10.1 depicts the lifetime revenues of Hollywood's all-time blockbuster movies, broken down into domestic (U.S.) and foreign revenues by dollars.

The Marvel movie Avengers: Endgame broke all records in its release year. It is set to become the highest-grossing movie ever. With 70% of its box office revenues coming from outside the United States, it highlights the need for Hollywood studios to create content that can break out internationally.

Exhibit MC10.2 shows the breakdown between U.S. and foreign revenues for films produced by Marvel Studios, which is owned by Disney. Hollywood now garners roughly $8 of every $10 of its revenues internationally, which is somewhat surprising given several constraints that U.S. films face when selling internationally.

"We Need Movies That Break Out Internationally"

Given the increasing importance of non-U.S. box-office sales, Hollywood studios are changing their business models. Rob Moore, vice chairman of Paramount Pictures, explains, "We need to make movies that can break out internationally. That's the only way to make the economic puzzle of film production work today."¹

Embracing the importance of their movies' global appeal, movie studios have changed several tactics. Some mega-releases, such as Disney's Monsters University (the prequel to Monsters, Inc.), premiere first in foreign markets before being shown in the United
