THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF COMMODORE CHARLES MORRIS, USN.

For anyone with a penchant for early United States history, particularly that aspect which pertains to the Navy, the autobiography of Commodore Charles Morris (1784-1856), a Connecticut native, cannot fail to be of engrossing interest. Only three of the prominent American naval commanders of the War of 1812 wrote memoirs: Morris, David Porter, and Thomas MacDonough. Porter's Journal of a Cruise, etc. (1815), while one of the foremost, and in parts enthralling, naval stories of all time is concerned exclusively with the voyage of the frigate Essex in 1812-1814. MacDonough's, though broader in coverage and indubitably of value, spans a mere 12 pages. (It can be found, by the way, in The Life of Commodore Thomas MacDonough, U.S. Navy (1909) by Rodney MacDonough, pp. 20-32.¹) Morris' autobiography on the other hand, like MacDonough's, commences with the start of his career as Midshipman in 1799 and extends up to the early 1840's, when Morris was, by then, one of the Navy's most distinguished senior officers. It runs 130 plus pages, only, again like MacDonough, it's a pity it isn't longer in length than it is.

The work was ostensibly intended alone for his family. But in late 1879 or early 1880, two of Morris' daughters turned a copy over to the United States Naval Institute who then first published it in their Proceedings issue of April 1880, vol. VI, no. 12. It has since been re-printed in 2002 by the Institute, and is now readily available as a hard-bound book.

The Autobiography of Commodore Charles Morris, USNabounds in unusual trivia and anecdotes, a few action filled episodes, and wise reflections on both life and the navy. Leaving aside the matter contained in the excerpts we've selected for this article, the following are some of these worth noting in our preface. When some of Commodore Edward Preble's midshipmen went visiting the towns and locales in Sicily in the Spring of 1805, accompanying them was the young Washington Irving, at the time taking a tour of western Europe. Morris on several occasions points out and gives examples of British naval officers treating the American navy with scorn and contempt prior to the War of 1812, yet not all British naval officers were so, and some were, as he himself records, actually helpful and accommodating. As Isaac Hull's First Lieutenant on the Constitution, it was Morris who recommended warping or hedging to escape the overwhelming British squadron that pursued her. Subsequent to the action with the Guerriere, and in which he was grievously wounded, Morris was promoted to Captain's rank, much to the ire of those his senior on the list waiting for the same honor, bypassing that of Master Commandant Morris notes that the reason Madison's Secretary of War John Armstrong did not fortify Washington, D.C. was that it "offered no sufficient motive for such an enterprise" (i.e., a serious attempt to take the city).² Other topics and events

² Henry Adams, in chapter 10 of volume 6 of his The History of the United States of America during the Administrations of James Madison: 1809-1817, observes that it was the engineering skills of West Point graduates that made the defenses at New York, Norfolk, Fort Erie, Fort Mifflin, and Fort Mifflin impregnable or near impregnable. And had the same skills utilized and measures been taken at Washington, D.C., the nation's capital could easily have been saved.
