Arabs And Africans Co Operation For Development:

Arabs and Africans Anthony Sylvester, 1981 Monograph on international cooperation for economic development between OPEC Arab country and the countries of Africa south of Sahara focuses on the role of Arab countries in providing economic aid to Africa examines political aspects of development aid and considers the role of the Arab development bank Map photographs and references Arab-African Cooperation Chedly Ayari, 1984

Interdependence In A World Of Unequals Dunstan M. Wai, 2019-02-26 The accumulation of surplus petrofund by some Arab countries far exceeding the present absorptive capacities of their economies has given rise to the idea of a major new development effort in sub Saharan Africa financed by Arab surpluses and supported by OECD technology and expertise The guiding principle in the idea of a tripartite partnership is that given a proper allocation of responsibilities among the three regional participants cooperation would benefit all parties The Arab countries it is argued would gain experience in management and in the acquisition of technology as a result of increased transactions with Western industrialized countries Funds from the Arab countries would catalyze accelerated development in sub Saharan Africa and would provide a desirable alternative to OECD intermediated flows of capital and trade between Africa and the Arab world this could help reduce Africa s dependence on the OECD countries for technology expertise financing and markets And finally the OECD members would benefit politically from an effective development effort involving their response to initiatives taken by the South and would gain economically by increasing their exports as African and Arab absorptive capacities rose and by continuing to exercise management functions in the context of development To further explore the potential of this triangular cooperation a group of experts from Africa the Arab Middle East Western Europe and North America held a conference at the Rockefeller Foundation conference center in Bellagio Italy in May 1980 In their discussions the basis of this book they identified and analyzed a wide range of problems and issues involved They concluded that the central issue is whether trilateral projects of appropriate design for the African setting can be identified and implemented through arrangements that ensure an equitable and effective distribution of responsibilities risks and benefits among the participants Fifth Meeting of the Coordination Committee for Afro-Arab Cooperation, Khartoum, March 13, 1981 League of Arab States.
